Millions of people eat fish on Fridays because traditions say "Friday is fish day," yet fish is just as valuable an article of diet any other day in the week. Hundreds of manufacturers and their agencies release schedules on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Fridays because presumably it will hit the family when it is stocking up on all kinds of commodities.

A bird's eye view of the national linage by days for January, February and March in a typical mid-western city shows how 227 national advertisers are placing their schedules.

The makers of drug products, always sticklers for persistency in advertising and directly dependent on results, lead the way in "daring" to use Saturday's issues. Bayer's Aspirin used 42 lines on that day each week, Dr. Edward's Olive Tablets 50 lines, or thereabouts, weekly, Hy-Pure Products 28 lines, Dr. Scholl's Zino-Pads one 14-line insertion, Bulgarian Herb Tea an occasional 14 or 38-line insertion, Chamberlain's Cough Remedy 40 lines, Palm-Olive Soap several 100-line and 120-line advertisements, and the tale is about told.

Advertise food products on Saturday? At least one highly successful national advertiser stands out in refreshing relief against the entire field. Walter Baker's Cocoa week after week released copy only on Saturdays. The rest of the week this advertiser permitted other manufacturers to tell their stories. Every Saturday, his 168 lines almost "owned the paper" because he was one of the few advertisers there. Either local or national competition for attention value was slight. Out of all the national advertisers of the country, this policy stands out on these records as unique. Whether or not since its recent acquisition by the Postum group, its policy will be changed, is too early to say.

Mulkey Salt through space on several Saturdays was the only other food advertiser "in the running" on that day.

During February, 1927, here are some facts as to days of the week used by national advertisers in one city:

MAYOR MOVES TO DROP $1,000,000 LIBEL SUIT

Attorney for Duvall of Indianapolis Files Dismissal Motion in Action Against Newspapers

(By Telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Sept. 6.—Mayor John L. Duvall today filed a motion to dismiss his $1,000,000 damage suit against Thomas H. Adams, publisher of the Vincennes Commercial; D. C. Stephenson, former Klan leader in Indiana; Court Asher, a former Stephenson lieutenant, and other newspapers and their publishers.

The suit was pending in Superior court, Room 1, before Judge James M. Leathers. No date for ruling on the motion was set by the judge. At the same time Stephenson dismissed a cross complaint seeking damages of the mayor for libel.

The dismissal motion in behalf of the mayor was filed by James E. Rocap, Indianapolis attorney, while Robert H. Moore, Stephenson's lawyer, filed the motion on behalf of the former Klan leader, who is now a life convict in the Indiana State Prison at Michigan City. Both motions were formal and were about two typewritten lines in length.

Mr. Rocap declined to comment on his action. He would not state whether a new damage complaint would be filed to replace the one he wants dismissed, although he said no such complaint is ready for presentation. It was considered unlikely that another suit would be filed.

The mayor's suit was brought last fall as the result of the publishing by a group of newspapers of an alleged agreement between Stephenson and the mayor, a candidate at the time the document was alleged to have been signed. According to terms of the alleged contract, Duvall agreed that, if elected, he would not appoint certain city officials without the approval of Stephenson. The mayor denied writing the letter and declared his signature to the document was a forgery.

Mayor Duvall said tonight that he understood the attorneys in the case had reached an agreement.

AD MANAGERS ELECT KELTON

Midwest Group Holds Annual Convention in Kansas City

(By Telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Sept. 7.—Steve Kelton, advertising manager of the Houston (Tex.) Chronicle was elected president of the Midwest Newspaper Advertising Managers Association at the annual fall meeting here. Roy L. Bailey, Salina (Kan.) Journal was named vice-president; Sam Gerhart, Ft. Smith (Ark.) Southwest American, secretary, and Sam Wheeler, Springfield (Mo.) News, sergeant-at-arms.

Advertising men from newspapers in Kansas, Missouri, Texas, Arkansas, Nebraska, Minnesota, Oklahoma and South Dakota attended the conference.

JOINS PHILADELPHIA DAILY

Robert W. Jones, for 12 years editorial writer on the Pittsburgh Chronicle Telegraph, prior to the recent consolidation with the Sun by W. R. Hearst, is leaving Pittsburgh Sept. 12 to join the Philadelphia Public Ledger as an editorial writer. He was formerly editorial writer on the Pittsburgh Gazette-Times, Sunday editor of the old Pittsburgh Dispatch, and editor of the Housekeeper Magazine. He has also written for syndicates and magazines.

NEWSPRINT WASTE FIGURES

Statements of 45 publishers in the midwest, of large, medium and small newspapers reveal that in May percentages of white waste which included transit, core and press waste varied from .56 to 2.56, according to the current S. N. P. A. bulletin. Miscellaneous waste which included bags, spoils and wrappers, together with miscellaneous waste varied from 2.02 to 4.10. GIOVANNOLI RESIGNS

Leaves Lexington (Ky.) Leader After 14 Years as Editor and Manager

The resignation of Harry Giovannoli after 14 years as editor and manager of the Lexington (Ky.) Leader was announced this week.

John G. Stoll, owner of the paper and former publisher, is now editor and publisher.

Fred B. Wachs, who has served the leader for eight years, first in the advertising department and later as business manager, succeeds to the general managership.

TRUCK DRIVERS STRIKE

New York Papers Bring in Newsprint Supplies Under Heavy Guard

New York newspapers this week brought in their newsprint supply from branch storage houses under heavy police guard, when 6,000 truck drivers went on strike Wednesday. The drivers are asking $45 a week instead of $40, and an eight-hour day instead of nine.

Union delegates presented a proposed new contract on Wednesday which they asked the newspapers to sign. The newspapers refused, but declared their willingness to permit the men to return to work under the old contract, and to agree to any new contract accepted by the industries more directly concerned. When this proposal was declined, newspapers proceeded to move the paper into the pressrooms with other labor. By nightfall all claimed to be receiving an adequate supply.

New York newspapers are able to keep an average of three-days' supply in their main offices keeping the bulk of their reserve newsprint in outside warehouses.

FEDERAL HEARINGS POSTPONED

Resumed hearings in the advertising agency complaint before the Federal Trade Commission set for Chicago, Sept. 6, were postponed until the first week in October, because vacations prevented many important witnesses being on hand.

Mr. Gray for the last eight years has been managing editor of the Adrian Telegram of which Mr. Perry is the publisher. He is president of the new corporation which will be known as the Monroe Publishing Company and will assume charge of operation as editor and general manager.

C. Kenneth Wesley, for the last two years assistant business manager of the Telegram, will share Mr. Perry's interest in the paper and will go to Monroe as business manager of the News.

The News is housed in a two-story brick building with modern mechanical equipment, including a 20-page press recently installed. It has the full leased wire service of the Associated Press.

The News was established as a daily in 1915.

HEARST TRIED TO HALT OLD GLORY'S FLIGHT TELEGRAMS TO PAYNE REVEAL

WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST on Wednesday gave out copies of telegrams that passed between him and Philip Payne, manager of the Old Glory flying expedition, and who was one of the three men aboard the craft. Commenting upon the telegrams, Mr. Hearst said:

"I was very apprehensive of the trip on account of the recent disasters, and I did my best to prevent the plane from going. I had no idea that Mr. Payne was going under any circumstances. I earnestly hope that all on board Old Glory will be saved."

The telegrams follow:

SAN SIMEON, Cal., Sept. 2, 1927.

E. D. Coblentz,
New York American, New York.
Copy to Phil Payne.

I do not think Old Glory should start except under the auspices and with the full approval of the Government. In view of the recent disasters, I will not assume responsibility, but will proceed only if the Government will assume authority and responsibility.

The flight is not undertaken for promotion purposes, but to advance aviation, and it is doubtful whether in the light of recent events these flights do advance aviation.

These numerous disasters may retard it. Therefore, I wait the sanction of the Government.

W. R. HEARST.

NEW YORK, Sept. 3.

William Randolph Hearst,
Care Ambassador Hotel,
Los Angeles, Calif.:

Secretary of Aviation Trubee Davison and Department of Commerce pronounced Old Glory the finest ship to attempt the trans-Atlantic flight. In addition, Mr. Coolidge has sponsored flight by putting letter on Old Glory to the King, while Secretary of State Kellogg has sent message to Mussolini. No plane has had such official sponsoring as Old Glory. The two pilots would rather give up all money in the world than forego their flight. Most assured they will succeed. Best regards from

PHIL PAYNE.

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 5.

Phil Payne,
Mirror, New York, N. Y.

Dear Phil: Please think of my situation. Have had one airplane lost and two fine men drowned. If another such disaster occurred effect would be terrible, not only on my peace of mind, but on public opinion. I telegraphed you all this and tried to have you get pilots to accept prize and give up dangerous adventure.

W. R. HEARST.

The following message was written by Mr. Payne and given to an associate on the Daily Mirror to send to Mr. Hearst after Old Glory had hopped off:

OLD ORCHARD, Me., Sept. 6.

W. R. Hearst,
Examiner, Los Angeles, Calif.

Dear Chief: The pilots appreciate your magnanimous offer, but insist they be allowed to fill their contracts to fly. Weather ideal today and further delay ruinous to morale of pilots. Every possible precaution taken. Army and State inspectors went over Old Glory this morning and gave written approval to flight. You have been a great chief to work for. I honor and love you and I know you will forgive me any mistakes I have made. Affectionately.

PHIL PAYNE.

I. R. KIRKWOOD LEFT $250,000 TO ART

Bequest Makes $2,750,000 Now Available for William Nelson Gallery —Residue of Estate to Brothers

The will of Irwin R. Kirkwood, executed Aug. 1, 1927, and filed for probate Sept. 2, disposes of a personal estate estimated at approximately $1,500,000.

Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars is added to the building fund of the William Rockhill Nelson Gallery of Art, bringing that fund up to $2,750,000 with the bequests of Mrs. Nelson, Mrs. Kirkwood and Frank F. Rozzelle, the Nelson family attorney.

Mr. Nelson left his estate, now approximately $15,000,000, with the income to be used for the purchase of works of art.

Plans for fully financing purchase of the stock in the Kansas City Star, owned by Mr. Kirkwood, have been worked out by the organization, but have not yet been announced.

Under the agreement existing in the stock trust, to which all the stockholders were party, the stock must be sold back into the organization, consisting of nearly 100 stockholders. Ten months after the stock is deposited by Mr. Kirkwood's executors remain before the stock need be taken over. Mr. Kirkwood owned only 15 shares mores than half of the 25,000 shares, par value $100. Insurance in favor of the stockholders amounts to $625,000, or nearly $50 a share, so that the organization expects no difficulty in financing the stock and keeping it within the organization as it stands now. The organization as it is now, so far as the direct operation of the newspaper is concerned, is practically the same as at the time of W. R. Nelson's death in 1915. It is understood there will be no change in the executives as at present constituted, the general executives and heads of departments being in immediate charge of operation as they were before the death of Mr. Kirkwood.

Thone S. Kirkwood of Baltimore and John R. Kirkwood of Washington are to receive approximately $500,000 each, being given one-half of the entire estate after specific bequests are deducted. In addition to the $250,000 gift to art, Mr. Kirkwood made these specific bequests:

Robert J. Kirkwood of Baltimore, Mr. Kirkwood's father, $35,000.

Thone S. Kirkwood of Baltimore, a brother, a Roland Park residence in Baltimore, which has been occupied by members of the Kirkwood family.

Mr. and Mrs. Thone S. Kirkwood, $50,000.

Mr. and Mrs. John R. Kirkwood of Washington (brother and sister-in-law of Irwin Kirkwood), $50,000.

Miss Margaret E. Kirkwood of Baltimore, a sister, $60,000.

Miss Jean Caroline Kirkwood, daughter of John R. Kirkwood and niece of Irwin Kirkwood, $25,000.

Miss Elizabeth Kirkwood, daughter of Thone S. Kirkwood and niece of Irwin Kirkwood, $25,000.

Miss Caroline T. Wilson and Mrs. Anne Wilson MacLaughlin, daughters of John E. Wilson, Mr. Kirkwood's close friend and executor, $5,000 each.

Grace and Holy Trinity Episcopal church, $10,000.

Oscar Stamm, on Mr. Kirkwood's Oak Hall staff, $5,000.

John E. Wilson is named executor in the will and Earl McCollum alternate executor.

PHIL PAYNE, "REPORTER ALWAYS," LOST AT SEA

"Well, It's a Grand Story Isn't It," His Reason for Going on Rome Flight in Missing Plane "Old Glory"—Mirror Managing Editor Had Pyrotechnic Career As New York Newspaper Man

By ARTHUR ROBB

"WHY am I going? Well—it's a grand story, isn't it? I'm going to write it on the way over, slap a lead on it when we get to Rome and put it right on the cable—the first report of an ocean flight ever written that way. There's another reason, too. I selected those boys—and Bertaud and Hill are the best men that the air mail service had—and if they crack up, I'm going to go with them."

Phil Payne smiled across the hotel room at his pretty bride of less than a year, Dorothy Hughes, who had won the title of Miss New York in a New York Daily News beauty contest a few years ago when Payne was managing editor of that paper, and Dorothy Payne smiled cheerfully back.

"Don't you want to go with him?" we asked.

"Yes," was her slow reply, "but I wish he wasn't going."

The night was August 31. All had been ready for a take-off that afternoon. All had been ready for 14 days, with steady rain or the resultant soggy runway balking every effort of Payne and his pilots to raise the Old Glory airplane from dangerous Roosevelt Field.

The Weather Bureau had promised a 15-mile westerly breeze for dawn the following morning, but the sky was overcast when Payne came to the hotel door with the writer for an au revoir handshake and skyward glance that might give hope that the elements would obey the government's orders. In the lobby, Mrs. Payne, with Hill and Bertaud, Mrs. Bertaud and Mrs. Callaghan, Bertaud's mother, and Capt. Eric Densham, the plane's motor expert, talked of a midnight automobile ride to the seashore, alternating with ominous comments upon the absence of news of the St. Raphael plane, then supposed to be over mid-Atlantic.

Payne refused to believe the menace of the clouds.

"We'll take off in the morning, if there's half a chance," he said, "and if I can do anything for you in Rome, cable me care of Universal Service. So long."

September 1 was the rainiest day that has visited Long Island in many years and all the world knows that "Old Glory waited another day before taking off with a light load for the safer starting line of Old Orchard. Payne had heard of the long hard beach on the Maine coast and his inquiries at the Weather Bureau convinced him that the season for west winds on Long Island was near its end. Carrying less than half of the fuel load needed for the Rome flight, the ship could easily rise on the short mile course of Roosevelt Field, and Payne had little difficulty in convincing his associates that the change was desirable.

This young man (he is only 34 years of age) never learned the art of flying, but he had used airplanes as other men use the railroad limited to report the news and bring the day's pictures to the Daily News and later the Daily Mirror. "A reporter always," as he testified at the Earl Carroll perjury trial, it was not unusual for him to fly to the scene of a big story and on the spot direct his batteries of cameras and typewriters. He had absorbed the lore of aviation with as much zest as if it had been a murder mystery, and in the course of the evening's conversation, he outlined story after story which he intended to write upon the return from Rome.

The Rome flight was merely a preliminary, he revealed. A few days before, a New York reporter had intimated in his paper that dissension had arisen between Payne and the Pilots because of Payne's desire to accompany the plane to Rome. The story gave the impression that Payne's addition to the crew would prevent the ship from carrying its full supply of fuel, the vital necessity of which was demonstrated to the narrator, himself an aviator, by the installation of an unusually large tank a few days before.

There was no such dissension, Payne informed the present writer. The report had arisen after he had been seen in an animated discussion with Bertaud on the field and had refused to inform reporters of the conversation's subject.

"As to the large tank," Payne continued, "my weight is the equivalent of gasoline sufficient for less than an hour's flight and we could have carried plenty of gas in the old tank. We put in the big tank not for this flight but for the jump from Seattle to Tokio, which we plan to make after we finish the Rome flight. After we return, we are going to increase the wing surface and add two smaller motors and I'm confident that this plane can hop the Pacific. We're going after the non-stop coast-to-coast record, too."

Payne intended to write his story of the flight en route in pencil.

"I've tried it," he said. "The other day, J. D. (Hill) took the plane out on a flight to test the radio and I experimented with writing messages. It's a good deal easier than writing on the ordinary Pullman car table and the script is just as legible. I won't take a typewriter because I don't need it. I'll cover the first trans-Atlantic air asignment and I'll cable EDITOR & PUBLISHER a story just as soon as we get to Rome. The part of the trip that I'm most doubtful about is the last 400 miles or so across the Mediterranean. If we hit fog or headwinds crossing the south of France, we may find the gas low near the end of the flight. If so, I don't believe we'll risk crossing the corner of the Mediterranean without refueling. But, once we get past this take-off I'm confident the worst of our troubles will be over."

Doubts occupied very few moments of this spectacular young man's last hours on United States soil. That he was thoroughly aware of the possibilities of disaster is evidenced by his remarks quoted at the beginning of this story, but the possibility of disaster had seldom deterred him in any of the exploits with which he had kept Park Row's people stirred since 1922.

Herbert Mayer, Mirror reporter, who had worked with Payne on many big stories, was a constant companion to his boss during the last Long Island hours.

Payne lived and thought in terms of copy, even to the end. They tell at Old Orchard that just before he crawled to the place he was to occupy on the take-off—lying flat on the catwalk below the 5,000 pound tank of gasoline—a reporter came up and offered his hand.

"I'm with the Press-Herald in Portland and I want to wish you good luck," he said.

"Thank you," Payne replied. "By the way, do you know who happens to be the caption-writer on your paper?"

"Yes."

"Well, I want to hire him because he's a whizz."

"Ready to go," shouted the engineers, above the motor's roar.

Payne swung beside the cockpit.

"George," he called to George D'Utassy, president of the Mirror, "this reporter will tell you who their caption writer is. I want you to employ him while I'm away."

Seconds later, the ship curved gracefully toward the North Atlantic sky and its engine's drone died in the distance. A few staccato radio messages from Bertaud's key, a wreath dropped in mid-ocean for Coli and Nungesser, a baffling S. O. S.—and "the rest is silence."

Although a managing editor by title, and vice-president of the Public Press Corporation, publishers of the New York Mirror, Philip Payne, 34 years old, continued to the end a newspaper reporter. He told friends before he left on the seemingly ill-fated Old Glory flight that he thought he was handling one of the finest assignments of the year.

Sensational news with which Mr. Payne was connected intimately ofttimes as reporter as well as editor during his pyrotechnic career as newspaper man included the Walter S. Ward murder trial; the revival of the Hall-Mills murder mystery, which ended in acquittal of the defendants; and the Earl Carroll "bathtub" story. It seemed that whatever he touched turned into golden circulation. He was managing editor of the Daily News during its early giant circulation strides, and, succeeding Walter Howie on the New York Daily Mirror brought that new tabloid's circulation up by 25,000 jumps. As the Mirror's circulation grew, the young man at its helm grew in popularity with his chief, William Randolph Hearst, and the "chief" always had many complimentary things to say about "that boy, Phil."

Too impatient to be always at the desk just as likely as not you would find Phil Payne out on a story himself with his reporters. He was that way during the Hall-Mills case. Officially Herbert Mayer was in charge. During many days of the trial, however, Philip Payne was sitting in the press section of the famous Somerset court house.

When the Mirror first broke this sensational murder mystery revival last summer, Payne was at the scene. His by-line was placed over the story telling of the dramatic arrest of Mrs. Frances Stevens Hall.

At the height of the trial the defense attorneys bitterly assailed the Mirror's managing editor, when he was in the press section one day, declaring that he had conceived the idea of reviving the case merely to sell papers. Payne hotly denied these insinuations at the time. Later the murder charges were dismissed. In the last several months the defendants of the famous trial, with the exception of Henry Stevens, have filed a total of $3,000,000 in libel suits against William Randolph Hearst, the Mirror and the Evening Journal, as a result of this sensational story.

Referring to the Hall-Mills affair, Mr. Payne later said, "I'd do it all over again."

Because of the sensational tactics he sometimes employed, Payne was given the soubriquet of the ring-master of tabloid journalism. It was a name he did not like particularly. He preferred to be known as a defender of the poor against the rich. His first claim to newspaper fame came when he was managing editor of the New York Daily News in 1922. He literally single-handed through the young New York tabloid forced a trial of Walter S. Ward, wealthy vice-president of the Ward Baking Corporation on a charge of killing Clarence Peters, an unknown ex-sailor. The slogan he coined at the time and ran persistently in the News was "Can a rich man commit murder and get away with it?"

One of the early sensations Payne sprang on the Mirror, which Mr. Hearst started for his son George Hearst in 1924, was to print what he claimed was the true solution of the killing of young Peters by Walter Ward.

A journalistic theory followed by this young editor was that to succeed a newspaper must be talked about.

"The tabloid stunt feature," Mr. Payne has said in an interview with EDITOR & PUBLISHER, "dates way back in journalistic history. But I connect it particularly with the elder Joseph Pulitzer. It was said of Mr. Pulitzer that nothing pleased him more than to hear his newspaper discussed. When he overheard someone say 'Did you see that damned story in the World?' Mr. Pulitzer was delighted. He wanted plenty of word-of-mouth advertising, the most valuable in the world."

This idea of Payne's that it was beneficial to have the paper talked about whether favorably or unfavorably, may have prompted him to break the Earl Carroll "bathtub story" a year and a half ago.

Mr. Payne, together with a number of

"OLD GOLD" FLYING FOKKER PLANE TO ALL NEW ENGLAND CITIES

P. Lorillard Company, Through Lennon & Mitchell Agency, Try Airplane Advertising Stunt in "That Provincial New England Territory"—Is It Publicity or Not?

A MANAGING editor of a Boston evening paper went out to his lunch not so many days ago and was delayed somewhat on his return by gawking crowds, who were stumbling over each others' corns, getting stiff necks, and generally obstructing traffic to obtain a view of a giant Fokker airplane flying overhead.

Down from the airplane, which carried the name and slogan of "Old Gold," the not-a-cough cigarette of the P. Lorillard company, drifted a mysterious voice, wisecracking in general, but in particular advising puffing pedestrians to purchase the latest in 15 cents for 20 "pills."

Mr. Managing Editor finally broke through the crowd and got back to his desk, where he shouted to his news editor:

"Where is that Old Gold airplane story?"

"What?" came the reply, "that press agent stunt. I've got it inside."

"Throw it on page one," said Mr. M. E.

Was he a victim of free advertising hokum?

In justification he said:

"Thousands saw the plane. They wanted to know what it was all about, and who sent it up in the air. We told them."

Said an editor elsewhere:

"Certainly cover the flight as a new interesting advertising stunt. But it is not a news function to specify the brand name of the cigarette, the publication of which demands a price in the advertising columns."

While this mythical debate is on, R. W. Orr, of the Lennen & Mitchell agency, is gathering on his desk the front pages of New England newspapers, nearly all of which are playing "Old Gold" in headlines and text in front page news space free, and charging regular rates for advertisements inside.

"We are sending this airplane with its 'Voice from the Sky' invention to every city and town in New England," Mr. Orr said. "We find it a great means for stimulating sales. I imagine the complete coverage of New England this new way will require a month. When we finish with this territory, we may take it elsewhere.

"We have discovered, we believe, an entirely different advertising medium. It is a stunt, which combined with newspaper advertising, tends to kick-up a campaign.

"The 'voice from the sky' doesn't take the place of the newspaper. It stimulates and supplements newspaper space.

"Our intention in sending the plane aloft over New England was not to get publicity. We thought before we started that we would get the publicity voluntarily, because in our opinion the airplane flight with the mysterious voice attachment has news value.

"We began our campaign in New England, because we considered it a good try-out market," continued Mr. Orr. "It is a more-or-less self-contained country of its own, somewhat provincial, in other words. Circulation of its newspapers is confined within its borders.

"We haven't stopped advertising in New England yet. To be sure we have cut out a number of small dailies, but the linage is as big today as when we started.

"If it was publicity we wanted when we started airplaning we knew we could get it from New England papers, because of the amount of money we had already spent in this territory. We asked for nothing, however, and the only paper so far that has refused to give us space in its news columns for the airplane flight has been the Providence Bulletin & Journal."

From the beginning, although other mediums have been used, Old Gold has been primarily a newspaper account. It's success is considered phenomenal.

While Mr. Orr declined, for business reasons, to furnish EDITOR & PUBLISHER with figures of the Old Gold advertising appropriation or of the results obtained, he said:

"Newspapers have done a big job for us. The P. Lorillard company only recently had to purchase a factory in New Jersey which increased production of Old Golds 30,000,000 a day. This was formerly a Camel cigarette factory. A new factory, about the same size, has also been purchased in Louisville, Ky."

A technical description of the new "voice in the advertising sky" as furnished by Lennen & Mitchell, reads as follows:

"The great Fokker airplane, 'The Voice from the Sky,' which will broadcast the message of Old Gold cigarettes over your city, is an exact duplicate of the plane that carried Commander Byrd to the North Pole. It is driven by three motors, weighs six tons, and carries a crew of five.

"The plane has two pilot seats located just behind the central motor, and in front of the passenger cabin. There are separate controls and gages for each motor. The gas tanks which have a capacity of 400 gallons, are located in the wings.

"The passenger cabin is glass-enclosed and is quite commodious. In this cabin is fitted the amplifying device equipped with four-power tubes totaling 1,000 watts.

"The powerful amplifiers, through which the sound is transmitted from the clouds, have a range of several miles from an altitude of 3,000 feet. They are capable of magnifying sound impulse in the ratio of 100 million to 1.

"The amplifiers are powered by three propeller-driven generators attached to the motor supports. Each propeller has one blade and is so designed that a governor keeps the generator at even speed, regardless of the momentum of the ship.

"The announcer sits in a sound-proof room at the rear of the cabin and talks into a microphone similar to that used in radio broadcasting. The voice is carried through three big horns located in the floor of the ship. The big difference between this method of broadcasting and radio, is that in radio the sound is carried by ether waves while in this latest invention ordinary air waves are used.

"The 'Voice from the Sky' invention is regarded as one of the outstanding developments in the science of modern communication, taking its place with the trans-Atlantic telephone, radio photography and other marvels of the age. It has been received with great enthusiasm by the Army and Navy authorities."

In addition to printing all the advertising details, many of the papers went to the expense of having halftone made and reproduced pictures of the plane with "Old Gold" on the fuselage.

"OLD GOLD" ON RECORD FRONT PAGE HOP

Is an airplane decked out in this commercial fashion news, unless it falls into a lake or a blueberry thicket? Editors debate question as the airplane flies over New England cities and into the news columns.

REAL WORK AT GENEVA COOPER REPORTS

Associated Press General Manager Expresses Satisfaction with Accomplishments of Recent Press Conference

Kent Cooper, who, as general manager of the Associated Press ought to know a great deal about conventions, has discovered a new type of newspaper meeting, he said on his return to New York this week from the International Press Conference at Geneva.

"For the first time in the history of newspaper conventions," Mr. Cooper said, "we really worked at Geneva, and I think that a lot was accomplished. The results ought to make it a lot easier for journalists all over the world. This is particularly true with reference to visas, which are going to be replaced by international police cards, a convenience which will save every one a lot of time and red tape."

Mr. Cooper said the most important topic discussed was the question of "property rights in news," an American expression which has as its European equivalent the term "inviolability of effort."

Mr. Cooper informed his questioners that he took the position that the three great news agencies and every daily paper in America must operate on the principle that news is property.

The A. P. general manager made two trips aboard this summer. He had barely returned from the first when forced to leave again to be present at the press conference.

JUDGE DENIES RECORDS

Refuses Four Boston Post Men Access to Grand Jury Minutes

Federal Judge Lowell of Boston, Mass., has denied motions filed by four Boston (Mass.) Post employes asking for bills of particulars as to what transpired in the Federal grand jury room prior to their indictment on charges of violating the Federal copyright laws.

The four men are alleged to have violated the copyright laws in the premature publication of Gov. Smith's article "Catholic and Patriot" which was written by him for the Atlantic Monthly of May.

If the motions had been granted, the defendants would have had the privilege of withdrawing their pleas of not guilty and they would also have received a bill of particulars as well as the right to inspect the grand jury minutes.

BRISBANE BACK FROM EUROPEAN TRIP

Editor of New York Journal Tells of Visit with Lord Beaverbrook, London Express—Saw Clemenceau at Vendee Home

Arthur Brisbane, editor of the New York Journal, returned from Europe Tuesday on the French liner Ile de France. Mr. Brisbane was accompanied by Mrs. Brisbane, and their son, Seward. A daughter, Sarah, who accompanied them abroad, is remaining in France to attend school.

In an interview with newspapermen Mr. Brisbane, on his arrival, said:

"In London I saw Lord Beaverbrook of the London Express. London was not unfamiliar to me as I had been there in my younger days, as correspondent for the New York Sun. Paris brought back many recollections. I was at school there in 1878."

Mr. Brisbane said he fulfilled one great wish while in France. He motored down to Jard in Vendee, where Clemenceau, in his retirement, works in his garden and lives in great simplicity in a cottage overlooking the sea. The editor said:

"I did not think he would see me, but when I sent word to him that I read his debates with Jaures when a student in Paris, he consented to see me.

"Clemenceau is vigorous for a man of his age, eighty-seven. He said to me of mankind: 'I do not detest men, but I do not like them either.' "

Mr. Brisbane believes that the World War produced three men who saved the Allies, Clemenceau, Lloyd George and Foch.

"Clemenceau said every one knows that everybody won the Marne, except Joffre, meaning that Joffre had won the battle."

With his characteristic quick words, Mr. Brisbane described the interior and exterior of the little cottage, the old woman, who is a devout Catholic, but who does not let that interfere with her attention of her distinguished charge because he is anti-religious. He spoke of the simple food, the frugal existence of the two.

Asked what his impressions of England had been, Mr. Brisbane quoted Voltaire, but not as expressing his own opinion. "The British are like their beer—froth at the top, dregs at the bottom, the middle excellent."

Mr. Brisbane added:

"They are getting along. All human beings are alike. If they owe you, they hate you; and if they pay part of what they owe, they think they have done an amazing thing."

Is Named President and General Manager of Evening Telegram

C. H. Brockhagen will known Pacific Coast newspaperman has been made president and manager of the Portland (Ore.) Telegram, afternoon newspaper, according to announcement made by that paper on Sept. 1. He took active charge of the Telegram immediately.

When J. E. Wheeler, former publisher of the Telegram became involved in financial difficulties, the newspaper went into a receivership several months ago. It was taken over by purchasers whose identity was not announced then nor at any time since.

Mr. Brockhagen, the new publisher, is a part owner of the Sacramento Union and has been identified with newspapers in San Francisco, Oakland, Spokane and Seattle.

ISSUES PROMOTION BOOK

The Worcester (Mass.) Telegram-Gazette recently issued an illustrated promotion booklet "The Story of the Worcester Telegram-Gazette" telling of the newspapers and their market. George F. Booth is publisher. Copies of the book have been sent to agencies and advertisers.

ADVERTISING'S "VOICE" IS ON DISPLAY

Rumble of Presses Keynote of Fourth Annual Graphic Arts Exposition, Opening in New York Monday to Continue to Sept. 17—Newspaper Visitors Find Much to See and Hear

TO hear the mere human voice at the Grand Central Palace, New York, these days, one cups a hand to the ear. The steady din of the powerful printed words and pictures in preparation almost shuts out a shouted sound.

At the fourth annual educational Graphic Arts Exposition that opened on Monday to continue at the Palace until Sept. 17, it is as though the very voice of advertising were on display, at least the mechanical creators of the voice, the machines that are the lungs, the windpipes, and the vocal cords of printing.

While the graphic arts, spoken of by master-printer orators as "the art preservative of all other arts," covers a range far beyond advertising and into the realm of literature and the reproduction of old masters, the advertising motif runs through the whole show, and it is noticeable that the gigantic color presses and the smaller clock-work job machines operated in the various booths are in the main turning out advertising folders for the curious to read. Advertising seems the reason why printing and the allied industries are fourth in this country today, behind only the makers of wearing apparel, the iron and steel manufacturers, and the builders of automobiles.

The first step into the rumbling replica of the country's fourth industry now housed at the Palace is a step into color. Guarded by two boys dressed as jockeys, symbolic of the race-horse speed of the machines, are displayed two Miller Simplex two-revolution automatic color job machines. Seemingly without guidance these deft machines pick up blank paper and push it through the color process to be dried at the end by blue jets of gas flame. These two presses stand like lithe striplings compared to the powerful Harris-Claybourn color press, a Harris-Seybold Potter product and the Miehle offset presses that loom behind them.

All machines are in motion, and moving down the right hand aisle the newspaper visitor pauses with interest at the booth of the Cline Electric Manufacturing Company, there to be informed by C. A. Dresser, who is in charge, that 90 per cent of the motors operating flat bed presses and folders on display this year are using Cline automatic controls.

Next to the Cline booth is that of R. Hoe & Co. There, in the midst of all that is modern, stands silent an old Blaew press, to show by contrast the seven-league strides the printer has taken in the last 150 years. A legend on the press reads:

"Built in the 18th century, this press is substantially the same as the one on which Benjamin Franklin worked as a journeyman in London more than 150 years ago. It has certain features invented about the year 1620 by William Jansen Blaew of Amsterdam, and these represent practically the first improvements upon the press used by Gutenberg in the middle of the 15th century.

"Very little further improvement was made until 1798, when the Earl of Stanhope replaced the wooden frame by one of cast-iron with a combination of levers for greater power, although retaining the screw. George Clymer, of Philadelphia, about 1816, dispensed with the screw, substituting a series of levers. In 1822, Peter Smith of R. Hoe & Co., built a press with a frame of cast-iron and the toggle joint substituted for the screw with levers and five years later Samuel Rust, of New York, introduced wrought-iron into the frame for added strength and decreased bulk. This Rust invention, known as the 'Washington' press, was purchased by R. Hoe & Co. With a few improvements, it is manufactured today as the Hoe Artist's proof press."

Near the Hoe booth is that of the Mergenthaler Linotype Company behind a screen built as an exact replica of the company's large Brooklyn plant, which covers two whole city blocks. An entrance to the exhibit is marked as a street corner, the company's well known address, Flushing avenue at Ryerson street.

Inside is another reminder of the past and the progress printing has made. In front of a "stage window" that shows in painted form a view from the old New York Tribune Building on Park Row, stands an old Blower linotype, the first installed by the Tribune in 1886. This was called a Blower machine, F. C. Grumman sales manager, explained, because the matrices when released from the magazine, were blown to their places in the assembler by puffs of air from an automatically operated bellows.

This crude machine which, however, did yeoman service for some years, looks as uncouth as the Piltdown man compared to a modern American metropolitan mayor visiting Europe, as seen beside the latest model linotypes of the Mergenthaler display.

To newspaper mechanical men and other trade visitors, William H. Street, vice-president of the Imperial Type Metal Company, at his booth, hands out a new booklet the company has issued, called "Type Metal Alloys," which is a revision of a book the same concern printed some years ago called "Type Metal Explained." Attendants are explaining the company's plus metal plan.

At the exhibit of the American Type Founders Company it was declared that visiting editors, typographers and advertising writers had shown particular interest in a new series of "Jazz" face types the company has produced in keeping with the present age of bobbed hair and bare knees. Known as the Gallia series, they are described as "a new departure in type faces, and, while extreme, are artistic and decorative." This company has a large groups of exhibits, occupying 6,500 feet of floor space.

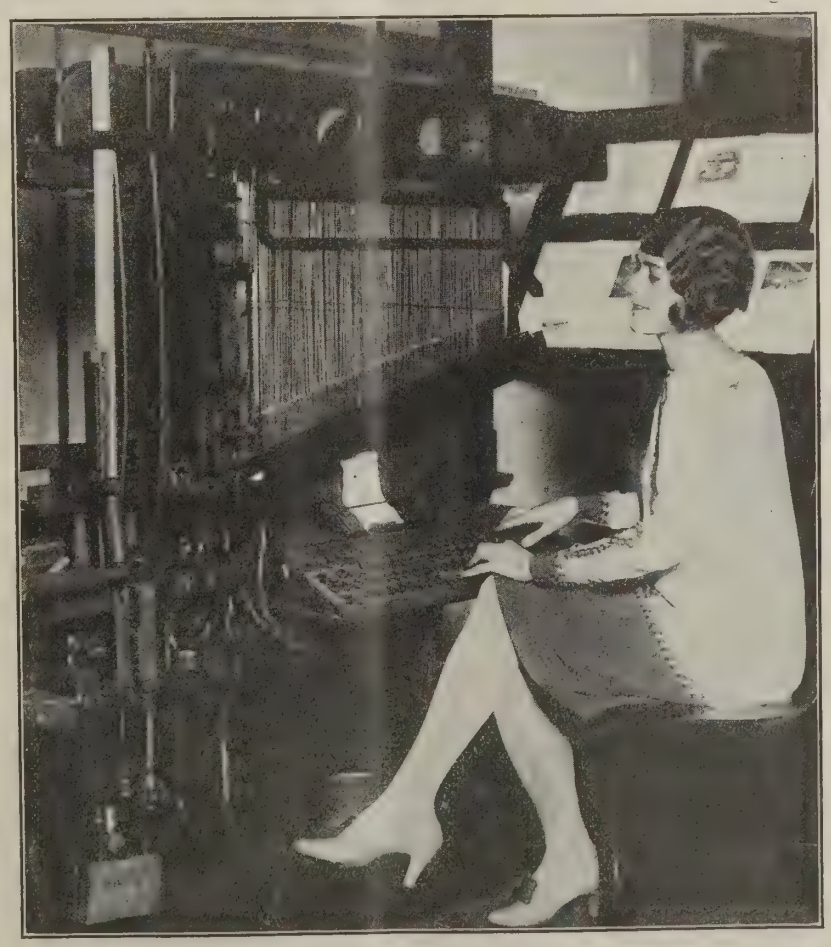
The type featured by the Intertype Company in its literature on display is the "ideal news series" as adopted by the New York Times, after experimental work by optometrists.

A huge wall map of the United States is used by the Lanston Monotype Company to show by dots the 15,000 monotypes in daily use.

A new entrant among graphic arts exhibitors is the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, which is seeking to show the commercial advantages of the new telephoto process. Pictures can now be sent over telephone wires between the following cities, New York, Boston, Atlanta, Cleveland, Chicago, St. Louis, San Francisco and Los Angeles.

While most of the exhibits on the main floor and the second floor are frankly commercial, there is a Graphic Arts Gallery on the third floor, which has the quieter atmosphere the name implies. Here on display are various newspaper, magazine, direct mail and poster advertisements, awarded certificates by judges of the exposition. In the newspaper section is the department store advertisement put out in New York newspapers with the slogan "No One Is In Debt to Macy's." Also shown were the original sheets printed by William Bradford, who in 1693 set up the first printing shop in Manhattan at 81 Pearl street.

Coincident with the exposition six organizations are holding conventions, including the International Association of Printing House Craftsmen, United Typothetæ of America, Employing Bookbinders of America, International Trade Composition Association, International Association of Electrotypers of America, and the International Printers' Supply Salesmen's Guild.



Among newspaper men of prominence who attended the first few days of the exposition were Joseph Clapham, mechanical superintendent of the Curtis-Martin Newspapers; A. C. F. West, mechanical superintendent of the Toronto (Ont.) Star; J. B. Hogan, Cleveland Press; George Stone, New York World; and Robert Maxwell, of the Capper Publications.

FRANKLIN DESCENDANT WORKS ANCIENT PRESS

Francis B. Huntington, the only living male descendant of Benjamin Franklin, shown operating an old Blaew press at the booth of R. Hoe & Co., Inc., at the Graphic Arts Exposition in Grand Central Palace. This old press is the property of R. Hoe & Co., and is identical with the one on which Franklin obtained his experience and training as a journeyman.

OLDEST LINOTYPE MACHINE ON EXHIBIT

The photograph shows Ethel Seiberling, of "A Night In Spain" using the oldest linotype machine which was used way back in 1886. It is on exhibit at the National Graphic Arts Exposition in Grand Central Palace.

FIELD MANAGERS MAY MEET WITH N. E. A.

Plan Joint Convention in Memphis Next Spring—Full Text of Resolutions Passed at Detroit

Plans for a joint meeting of the Association of State Press Field Managers with the National Editorial Association at Memphis next year are being made by the former group. Tentative dates for the meeting call for the sessions of the field men on May 23, 24, 25 and 26, to be followed immediately by the National Editorial Association convention on May 27, 28, 29 and 30 in Memphis, and the tour through Tennessee and Alabama lasting until June 9. Further details of plans for the joint meeting will be announced later.

Among the important business transacted by the field men during their meeting in Detroit recently was the passing of the following resolutions:

"The National Association of State Press Field Managers in convention assembled at Detroit, Mich., August 20-25, 1927, feeling that much progress has been made in the publishing and printing business in states operating under the field manager plan, and that in these states there is a better spirit of co-operation and a greater effort on the part of publishers to serve their readers, advertisers and communities, recommend the extension of this plan into other states as fast as it is feasible to do so.

"Recognizing the value of the National Editorial Association in its work for the publishers of the United States, we wish to renew our support of that organization and to lend it all the co-operation in our power.

"We recommend that the campaign inaugurated by the National Editorial Association against the government practice of printing corner cards on stamped envelopes be continued and urge the various state press associations to lend every assistance possible in carrying on the campaign.

"We further recommend the N. E. A. standard invoice and urge its general adoption.

"We look with disfavor upon the outside promoted subscription contest and recommend that publishers discontinue the conducting of such contests.

"We commend the trade publications on their fight against press agentry, more commonly known as free publicity, and urge publishers to refrain from opening their columns to these space grafters.

"We thank the National Printer-Journalist, The Publishers' Auxiliary and other trade publications for their splendid support of the work of the field managers and the work of the National Editorial Association.

"We thank the National Editorial Association for bringing to this meeting H. Z. Mitchell, of Bemidji, Minn., with his valuable fund of data compiled during his work as a member of the N. E. A. advertising committee.

"We recommend and urge the National Editorial Association to continue its efforts toward the establishment of a plan for guaranteed circulation statements of weekly newspapers to be furnished to the advertiser and as a basis for advertising rates.

"We recommend that all publishers make a comprehensive survey of their circulation territory and be ready to give this information on request.

"We urge state press associations to work for the elimination of the practice followed by manufacturing concerns of furnishing printed stationery to dealers either free or at cut rate prices.

"Whereas, the American Press Association has just compiled and published the first and only complete rate book of weekly newspapers ever attempted, and

"Whereas, while we recognize that the first book is not perfect and can and will be improved with future issues, we feel that the American Press Association book is a splendid achievement and of inestimable value to the advertisers and advertising agencies of America. Therefore, be it

"Resolved, that the American Press Association be complimented for this piece of work.

"In this connection we also wish to commend the officers of the National Editorial Association, who took the lead in advocating the need of a rate book embracing all newspapers, and feel that this effort was largely responsible for getting such a rate book without cost to the individual papers.

"(Signed) RESOLUTIONS COMMITTEE,

N. Y. AUGUST LINAGE BELOW 1926

ADVERTISING volume in New York City newspapers during August totalled 11,080,160 lines, as compared with 11,943,302 lines in August, 1926, a loss of 863,142 lines, according to figures just issued by the Statistical Department of the New York Evening Post. Much of the loss can be attributed to the fact that in 1926 there were five Sundays in August and four in 1927. The tables follow:

WHERE SHADOW-GODS ARE MANUFACTURED

Louella Parsons, New York American, Gives New Inside View of Hollywood's Hero Factory — 300 Press Agents Furnish 35 "Specials" With Something Fancy to Write About

By PHILIP SCHUYLER

SHADOW-GOD manufacturing has become an important sideline of modern journalism. There is nothing like the printed word to give reality to the shadowy shapes of the moving picture screen, and the public who see the players at their theaters want to become better acquainted with them through their daily papers. Thus the editors, following the theory that this believing world of mutts must have something or someone to fall down and worship, are prone to snatch at all available stories about moving picture players, and one finds that Hollywood, Cal., these sophisticated days, is supplying a large share of the urban world's gossip.

In the modern city of apartments, where few people know their next door neighbors, the gossipy news about the film stars and their goings and comings is, in the opinion of Louella Parsons, movie writer for the Hearst newspapers, filling "a most human want."

"But," she said in an interview this week, "I feel sorry for these movie people, who, known to millions the world over because of their screen appearances, must constantly be on parade. The smallest, meanest things they do leap into first-page news. Back fence gossip, usually of the friendly variety to be sure, must be told about them to satisfy the legitimate human craving for this type of information."

In Hollywood, today, according to Miss Parsons, there are about 300 publicity writers and at least 35 highly paid newspaper writers, who make their living writing newsy, gossipy stuff about the moving picture players. Miss Parsons, herself, is an important purveyor of film-land gossip. In addition to the Hearst newspapers, her column is sold to several hundred dailies; and it has been estimated, that it is read by nearly 6,000,000 moving picture fans.

There is some fanciful writing included with the Hollywood gossip, Miss Parsons admitted. Shadow-gods must be created because they are expected. Puffed-up, over-written heroes and heroines of screenland are called shadow-gods because their existence as public idols is as ephemeral as the shadows, seen only under the bright sun of publicity in the cloudless skies of public fancy, and disappearing into obscurity when the sky darkens and the sun sets. Shadow-gods merely strut and dance at the heels of greatness, and in the opinion of some skeptics are over-played in the newspapers.

Phrases are pinned like boutonnieres or corsages on the different heroes and heroines of the screen in an effort to make them distinguished. When Miss Parsons, for example, writes for her millions of readers, it is almost invariably about "the gorgeous Dolores Costello"; the "romantic Mr. Barrymore"; the "dashing John Gilbert"; "Gretta Garbo, the Scandanavian Vamp"; "Tom Mix, the garrulous"; "Lew Cody, the home-wrecker"; "Marion Davies, the blond beauty," or "vivacious Marion"; "the delectable Delores"; "the agile Doug Fairbanks"; "the limpid-eyed Mabel Normand"; "the irresistible Charlie Chaplin"; and "the engaging Constance Talmadge."

These form a sort of snap shot picture. The writers must give full length views, too, because people want to know about the lives behind the flickering figures of the screen.

"In obtaining copy," Miss Parsons said, "we can only take the word of the stars themselves or their representatives. It is true that some stars don't like the truth and are imaginative about themselves and their pasts; and, it is likewise true, that, against their wills, a lot is written about them by ambitious writers that is false.

"One of Corrine Griffith's relatives had at one time run a restaurant, for instance, and someone wrote that Corrine had been a waitress. She brought a libel suit and obtained a sizable judgment. It is true that most often writers imagine dream-stuff about the stars which the stars enjoy reading about themselves."

A curious trick of the publicity is that in some cases the actors and actresses made by their press agents actually strive to be the kind of dream-people created, and sometimes, Miss Parsons said, they actually succeed.

Miss Parsons cited the case of the late Rudolph Valentino. She happened to be the very first newspaper woman to interview this recent idol of the screen. She described him as at that time an "embarrassed, tongue-tied young cabaret dancer, who might easily be mistaken for a bus boy." Then the press agents got busy and Rudolph himself got busier, trying to live up to all that was being written about him. It was said he was an artist; and he immediately began to take an interest in art. It was said that he liked books; and he began to build up a marvelous library.

"He eventually justified all that was ever written about him," Miss Parsons said.

Tom Mix had a somewhat different experience. At one time, according to Miss Parsons, quite out of a blue sky he said something funny. He was thereupon dubbed, "the witty Tom Mix."

"He hasn't succeeded very well in living up to this reputation, although he certainly tries hard enough," Miss Parsons declared.

Miss Parsons doesn't assign too much credit to the writing and publishing craft for the making of moving picture idols. It is her belief that 20 per cent of the famous moving picture stars are made by publicity, while 80 per cent win through their own real ability.

"It has been proved," she said, "that a moving picture actor or actress cannot survive three bad pictures."

Good or bad pictures notwithstanding it is realized, of course, that "people" must be furnished with telescopes that the stars may be magnified. The majority of people detest facts and love mythology. They are given what they prefer. The writers about movie folk, in consequence, often write beautiful fables and let the unlovely facts lie untold.

They offer the same excuse that the boxing writers offer.

"People like to be bunked. We are entertaining the people," they say.

And in the same way that the boxing writers rarely speak harshly about Gene Tunney or Jack Dempsey, always emphasizing their heroic qualities, so the movie writers treat their celebrities.

In both instances wining and dining plays its part. The newspaper writers in Hollywood get to know the stage people well and to like them. It would not be human for them not to want to help out their game.

"When you know people socially, it is quite difficult to be severe with them," Miss Parsons confessed.

Finally, these Hollywood writers, in common with nearly all writers, are forever conscious of their publics. The moving picture writers believe they are appealing to this "believing world of mutts."

"To Lizzie and Susie who would just love to be hugged and kissed by the romantic John Barrymore," Miss Parsons said.

To draw a crowd mere man must be either undressed in naked realism or overdressed in romantic frills. The writers in Hollywood set themselves to the task of dressing or undressing the moving picture people for their appearance in the public prints. Then their typewriters become whirring sewing machines, and their copy is fitted to the stars like their suits and gowns.

For this type of metaphorical habiliment, styles change almost with the frequency of Paris-governed factual dress. At the present time, the fad happens to be for realism of the "just folks" brand, according to Miss Parsons. The writers are dressing the actors and actresses up as home-loving, quiet, intellectual people, fond of art, and collectors of vast and important libraries. The day when a girl to be a success in the movies just had to come from "an old southern family" is passed, Miss Parsons said, as has also the day when moving picture actresses had to bathe in champagne or milk to be popular.

"The new style of publicizing the moving picture people really presents a truer picture than the old way," Miss Parsons continued. "The majority of them really are awfully nice, decent people.

"Once it was thought that only bad news about movie folk was interesting. Now-a-days it even makes good copy, for instance, to tell the truth about Harold Lloyd's happy home life, which really is charming. He and Mildred Davis are like many other couples you know. They live very happily together, are very much in love, and devoted to their baby, Gloria.

"We can write about this now and it gets by the desk. In the old days it was considered damaging to a movie hero for his public to know he was even married, and if married, it must be unhappily. Tom Mix, for example, was married and had five children at a time when millions of movie fans were being lead to believe he was a care-free bachelor. The fact that he was leading an ordinary normal home-life was kept a jealously guarded secret. His children were even carefully instructed not to recognize him in public, leading, once, to an amusing incident.

"A curious writer learning of the Mix children found them once and engaged in conversation with them. 'Is that your mother,' he asked, indicating Mrs. Mix. 'Yes,' one of the children admitted. 'Is that your father?' was asked, with Mr. Mix indicated. 'O, no,' the child replied. When pressed further, finally said gravely, 'You see my father and mother aren't married.'"

The public itself must share in the responsibility for this changed style in the presentation of moving picture heroes and heroines, Miss Parsons believes. She receives thousands of letters each week, she declared, from moving picture fans. Some years ago these letters were all gushy and sentimental, while now, she said, they reflect an intelligent interest in affairs of the screen.

Miss Parsons traced the "finding" and the gradual exploitation of a star. There was the case of Dolores Del Rio. Edwin Carewe, happening in Mexico City, is introduced to this Senorita Del Rio. He brings her back to Hollywood with him. All the newspapers are invited around to meet the new "find." She is, the writers are told, "the daughter of a wealthy banker of Mexico City. She has been educated in Paris, etc., etc."

Senorita Del Rio has an engaging personality. She makes a hit with the men writers, and the inevitable catty woman writer is over-ruled. Speedily through the movie columns trips a new character. It is "the gorgeous Dolores," no less.

When pictures are made, organization of the publicity department is one of the initial steps. There is a publicity director in charge of the entire production, who is under the exploitation director of the company which happens to be making the picture. Under the publicity director is the press agent in charge of the fan magazines; the press agent in charge of the trade papers; the press agent in charge of the newspapers; and the press agent assigned to the stars.

These press agents have their friends among the Hollywood writers and in addition to the tons of literature broadcast generally, they "tip off" these friends to "exclusives." In Hollywood there is a general meeting place for the press agents, the writers, and the stars, the Montemart, a restaurant. Here every Wednesday evening the movie stars and their satellites gather and gossip is swapped, and news and information spread with the caviar.

Of course all news isn't gathered in this romantic fashion. Miss Parsons has her own private office in the Los Angeles Examiner building. She has a young boy assigned to her, who makes all the rounds of the studios bringing in information. She has her own friends among the actresses and actors and lunches informally with them frequently.

Miss Parsons is herself as much a part of the motion picture world as she is of the newspaper world. She is the author of more than 200 photoplays, and was reading scenarios for the Essanay Film Company when she started to work for the Hearst newspapers four years ago.

Her first newspaper experience was on the Dixon (Ill.) Star, where she worked on vacations from Dixon College. She married when she was young, and her husband died when her daughter, Harriet Parsons was three years old. Harriet will graduate next year from Wellesley College.

Miss Parsons was on the staff of the Chicago Herald when it was purchased and merged with the Examiner by Mr. Hearst. She left the paper at that time to join the staff of the New York Morning Telegraph, with which she was associated for five years. In New York Miss Parsons was prominent in newspaper circles, being president at one time of the Newspaper Women's Club.

NEWS CLUB IN NEW HOME

New York Society Has Three-Floor Headquarters for 700 Members

Now in its new home at 136 W. 42nd street, the Newspaper Club of New York is ready to entertain visitors and adequately accommodate its own 700 members, according to Denis Lynch, of the New York Herald Tribune, club president.

Dinner was served in the club's new restaurant for the first time this week. The headquarters comprise three floors, enabling the club to separate its library and lounge from its restaurant and its billiard and card rooms. The floor space, greatly in excess of the former location, is about 5,000 square feet.

"CHINESE PUZZLE" WINDOW DISPLAYS LOSE MONEY FOR ADVERTISERS

Most Retailers too Busy to Work Out Complicated Set-ups, Agency Finds—How Philco Radio Cooperated with Dealers to Get Results

By ARTHUR JOYCE

PRODUCING a window display for the retail dealer is one thing. Getting the dealer to use the display is something else again.

A survey conducted recently by the Eugene McGuckin Company, Philadelphia, shows that one of the big reasons why the average retail merchant does not actually use more of the display material sent to him by manufacturers, is that he does not know how!

That's a fact! It's all very well, the survey shows, for the manufacturer to produce nicely lithographed material for the dealer's window and for his counters. But unless the display is so strikingly simple in construction that the dealer can't "go wrong," or unless the dealer is given some idea how to use the trim effectively, chances are he will push it aside with the rest of his manufacturers' "sales helps" and very promptly forget it.

Another reason why some manufacturers don't get their displays into the dealers' windows and stores, is because the displays are too intricate and, in many instances, are veritable "Chinese puzzles." There is a wealth of instructions as to putting "Tab A" into "Slot B"; reversing "side panel to fit center piece at X" and "folding again to meet C at right angles to K."

Now, the average dealer is not a puzzle solver. He has all he can do to solve his own store problems. And there isn't much time left for him to do any experimenting with a window display setup. Unless the display is, first of all, attractive and secondly, is easy to set up, the dealer, as the survey shows, isn't a bit interested.

Only a comparatively few of the larger stores support a window display manager. It's all right for these experts to give their time to solving the problem of how a window display should be set up. But they are a mighty small minority. The average retail dealer or his salesman is the store's only window trim "expert."

Hence, the survey showed, he is the wise manufacturer or advertising manager who designs and produces first, a striking display, simply constructed and then tells the dealer how to use it.

An example of this kind of dealer service is shown in the window display now being distributed to retail radio dealers throughout the country by the Philadelphia Storage Battery Company, makers of the Philco line of Radio Socket Powers.

This display, in ten colors, comprises the center cut-out and six sales cards that do the "sales talking" for the dealer. One of its features is an electric socket arrangement, inserted in the center panel, into which can be plugged the wire eminating from the socket power. This shows the prospect at a glance exactly how he can hook up his Philco and what it will look like when he has it installed in his radio set.

Accompanying each display sent to the dealer is an Instruction Sheet that shows not only a suggested set-up for the Philco Window Trim, but brings to the dealer a batch of good sales information and tends to enlighten him on the importance of his window as a sales factor and how best he can make use of it to make it pay him real money.

The Instruction Sheet shows also the Philco Display and the six sales cards and tells the big sales point each of the cards is designed to shout to the prospect.

This Philco Instruction Sheet, which is reproduced on this page, contains also a wealth of window display information that might be read with profit by any advertisers interested in getting the proper slant on the importance of the retail merchant's window as a sales factor and how the window can be used to advantage in creating actual sales.

"Make Your Windows Pay You Real Money" is the title of one section of this insrtuction sheet. It reads as follows:

"The best way to do this is to see that it is properly 'dressed.' You know that few persons stop to look into a dull and unattractive-looking window. It's the well-dressed, well-lighted and nicely-arranged window that attracts.

"The sales-getting power of a window display is what makes your window pay. A well-dressed window will make sales just as quickly and as surely as your own store salesmen. It's your first contact with your prospects and on the impression it makes depends to a large extent whether you make or lose a sale. Competition in window merchandising is keen. The merchant with the best-looking windows usually is the prosperous merchant."

"Selling Your Merchandise Through the Window" is another sub-heading, emphasizing the need always for a well-dressed window. It says:

"Your window is the reflection of your store. Your store and your merchandise are judged largely by your window. Therefore, it is extremely important that your window absolutely be given as much personal attention as you give to the selection of your merchandise.

"An overcrowded window divides the attention of the prospect. He sees many things, becomes confused and he isn't impressed by any one item. Having too many choices, he passes them all by!

"Specialize on one line at each showing. Show PHILCO! It has prestige. The public wants Philco. You don't need to waste valuable space 'explaining' Philco. That's all been done for you through the newspapers and magazines of the country. All you need to do is to show Philco and tell your prospects how easy it is for them to have the Philco connected with their radio sets. That's where the Philco Sales Cards, which are part of the Philco Window Display, will actually talk to your customers and prospects for you!"

The question of what a store window actually is worth is raised in the paragraph headed "What Your Store Window Is Worth To You," which reads:

"It's hard to figure in dollars and cents just what your store window actually is worth. A window display is a definite and recognized sales factor. There are merchants who value their windows at $150,000 a year! It depends on location, of course, and the number of persons who pass them each day.

"It is safe to say, however, that at least 30 per cent of all the sales made in the average retail merchant's store are made directly through the window. It makes people buy who had no intention of buying and even if they don't buy the first time they look into your window, it directs their thoughts to the merchandise you are offering and they have your store in mind when they actually start out to make the purchase."

Then follow these instructions to the dealer, as to how best he can set up his Philco Window Display:

"When you install this Philco Window Display, make your window exclusively a Philco window. Or, if you sell radio sets, you can easily install one or two of these sets. When you do this, show the actual Philco Socket Power and its relation to the sets—how the Philco will look when connected with the sets.

"Philco AB Socket Power will run any battery-operated radio set from the electric current, so it really doesn't matter what make or style of radio set you display. There is a space in the central Philco cut-out for a Philco Socket Power and slots to plug in the electric wire. Then scatter a few others round the window—probably a Philco 'B' Socket Power, too, for those radio fans interested only in a 'B' unit.

"Use the Philco Sales Cards in the display, because they tell the Philco story—they do the selling, just like your own store salesmen. The Philco cards are your Philco 'talkers.' You can't talk personally to every person who stops to look into your window. Let the Philco Sales Cards do the talking for you.

"Show also your Authorized Philco Dealers' Certificate in the window. That ties up the Philco $1,000,000 national advertising and radio broadcasting campaign directly with your store. It tells your prospects that you are the Authorized Philco Dealer in your community. And they'll go to your store for their Philcos.

"Keep the Philco Window Display—the centerpiece, at least—in your window all the time. Change the other display merchandise, if you like, but keep on showing the Philco cut-out. There will be an all-season demand for Philco and you can't afford not to have the Philco display hit your customers and prospects between the eyes the moment they glance into your window—and as often as they pass your store. When you take the Philco Display out of your window, stand it on the floor of your store or on the counter. It makes a corking good showing and will make actual sales!

"Remember—the Philco National Advertising Campaign continues right through until next year and you've got to keep your window shouting PHILCO day and night, right through the next Fall, Winter and Spring, to be sure your store attracts all of the prospects in your community already sold on Philco and awaiting only an invitation from you to come in and buy Philco!"

TO PAROLE ENWRIGHT, JAILED FOR LIBEL

Boston Telegram Publisher to Be Freed from Prison Camp Sept. 15—Was Sentenced to Serve 8 Months Last April

Frederick W. Enwright, former publisher of the Boston Telegram, now defunct, will be released from the Lewksbury prison camp Sept. 15. It has been so ordered by Frank A. Brooks, chairman of the State Parole Board.

Enwright was sent to the prison camp from the Charles street jail in Boston, Aug. 14. He was sentenced to serve eight months for criminal libel last April 11.

The libel conviction grew out of a cartoon on former Mayor James M. Curley of Boston, which was published in the Telegram. The cartoon was headed, "Curley, the Thug."

Mr. Enwright also formerly owned papers in Lawrence and Lynn. He came to New York two years ago and started the New York Bulletin, which soon went into the scrap heap.

Practical Topics on Program of Mississippi Meet

A new kind of flood is being experienced in Mississippi.

It is a flood of acceptances to the postponed annual convention of the Mississippi Press Association, to be held Sept. 21-23. James H. Skewes, publisher of the Meridian Star, made public the program this week.

"This convention," Mr. Skewes said, "will lean toward the practical in printing and newspaper making. The speakers include many Mississippi editors and printers, who will talk 'shop' in intelligent, understandable, helpful terms."

Among speakers will be W. L. Lynn, secretary-treasurer, S. C. Beckwith Special Agency, New York; Dorothy Dix, writer for the Ledger Syndicate; L. O. Crosby, president of the Mississippi Board of Development; Mrs. Robert S. Ralston, editor of the Women's Federation Bulletin, and Dr. Arthur Crowden, of Columbus, Miss., author of daily "Sermons in Tabloid."

OLEAN HERALD SOLD TO GANNETT

John W. Baker of Ithaca to Publish Tenth Newspaper of Group—Herald Established Nearly 50 Years Ago

The purchase of the Olean (N. Y.) Evening Herald by Frank E. Gannett, Rochester publisher, and John W. Baker, general manager of the Ithaca (N. Y.) Journal-News, a Gannett newspaper, was announced Sept. 8. The Gannett interests took over publication immediately.

The consideration was said to be $100,000.

The Herald has been published in Olean for nearly fifty years. It will now take its place among the ten publications by Mr. Gannett. Mr. Baker will be the publisher.

Newspapers now owned by Mr. Gannett and his associates in their publication are: Rochester Times-Union, Utica Observer-Dispatch, Newburgh News, Beacon News, Ithaca Journal-News, Elmira Star-Gazette, Elmira Advertiser, Elmira Sunday Telegram, and Plainfield (N. J.) Courier-News.

TO BROADCAST FIGHT

Scripps-Howard Newspapers Contracts With Rickard

Plans for broadcasting a blow-by-blow account of the Tunney-Dempsey heavyweight championship fight on September 22, through the National Broadcasting Company, were announced this week by Tex Richard, promoter. The broadcast is to be sponsored by the Scripps-Howard newspapers.

Rickard said he had contracted with the National Broadcasting Company for radio rights and the Scripps-Howard newspapers had, in turn, signed an agreement with the broadcasting company. Details were worked out between Rickard, W. H. Aylesworth, president of the National Broadcasting Company, and Roy W. Howard, chairman of the board of the Scripps-Howard newspapers.

FIGHTING SECRET MEETINGS

The Towanda (Pa.) Review is waging a crusade to compel the commissioners of Bradford County, Pa., to reveal the business conducted by them at their meetings. The Review complains that the commissioners carry out their affairs secretly and refuse to permit newspaper men to attend. The paper has asked newspapers throughout this section to express their views on the question.

INTERNATIONAL EXPANDS

When the Newfoundland legislature closed Sept. 6, the International Paper Company had succeeded in getting all its measures through, which means that the Corner Brook paper mill will be run by the American company. Corner Brook has a capacity of 600,000 tons of paper a day with a further development of a new mill at Gander Bay in Bonavista. By this means the International takes over all the Reid interests in Newfoundland.

CHAMBERLIN VISITS N. Y. WORLD

Clarence Chamberlin, New York to Germany flyer, visited the city room of the New York World this week, where he spent about an hour chatting with staff members. Carl B. Allen, a World reporter, is a particular friend of the aviator's. When Chamberlin arrived in Germany he cabled Allen to sail with Mrs. Chamberlin and join him abroad. Allen was granted a leave of absence and took the trip.

TRI-STATE MEET OCT. 6-8

Editors from Iowa, Nebraska and South Dakota will assemble at Sioux City, Iowa, Oct. 6, 7 and 8 for the annual convention of the Tri-State Editorial Association. More than 200 are expected to attend.

$3,000,000 N. Y. HEARST PLANT READY JAN. 1

Six-Story South Street Building Will Have 100 Press Units and 80 Linotype Machines—Journal, American and Sunday American to Be Printed There—Covers 45,450 Square Feet

THREE of William Randolph Hearst's New York newspapers, the Evening Journal, the American, and the Sunday American, will move Jan. 1 into the new six-story $1,750,000 Hearst Publications Building on South street, Harold D. Hynds, who has general charge of all construction operations of the Hearst organization, informed EDITOR & PUBLISHER this week. The plant covers a ground area of 45,450 square feet. The total floor area of the building is 218,812 square feet.

The plant, described as one of the "speediest" newspaper homes ever designed, will be valued at nearly $3,000,000 when it is fully equipped. Because the site upon which the building is located was originally a part of the East river, considerable difficulty was experienced in placing the foundations, causing an unexpected delay in completion of the building operations. Three thousand five-hundred pilings were driven to support the concrete footings.

The plant as it will look when completed was described in detail in a special section issued with the American on Sept. 5. The lead article in that section was written by H. Van Buren Wilkens, and is herewith reproduced in part:

"Every phase of newspaper production has been placed under the microscopic eye of an engineering expert with a view to securing maximum speed in production with minimum movement.

"Every known time saving device in connection with the making of a newspaper has been carefully considered. If it was found that it accomplished the sole aim of the engineers 'speed, more speed in production' it was adopted regardless of cost.

"Nearness of the plant to the East River docks will eliminate much of the motor hauling of newsprint.

"The entire structure is built around a paper warehouse which can accommodate 7,000 rolls of paper at one time.

"If the paper which is being taken off the trucks, is for immediate use, it is stripped on the unloading platform and placed on automatic chain carriers in slots in the floor which are on the press room level.

"This carrier speeds the roll directly to the roll feeds of the 100 high speed Hoe press units which are set at right angles to the warehouse.

"The presses can be operated as 32 sextuples, 24 octuples or 16 double sextuples. They are installed on the ground floor of the building.

"The motors which drive these presses are of 100 horsepower capacity, capable of stepping them up to a maximum speed of 36,000 to 40,000 papers per hour.

"They are controlled by Cutler-Hammer controls which are located on the balcony at the south end of the press-room.

Mounted on the presses themselves are push button stations with approximately 72 on each line of presses. From these push button stations it is possible to start the press from rest, accelerate, decelerate, stop and lock the press at 'safe' so no operator can possibly start it. These stations are all connected to the controller electrically.

"The operators on the presses are further protected by a series of lights and a signal bell. These lights must flash and the bell ring before the press can be put into motion.

"The Cline Electric Manufacturing Company has installed about 22 automatic electric paper hoists in the Journal plant.

"The Evening Journal and the New York American have separate press rooms and delivery rooms so that the editions of each do not conflict. The two plants, however, are united for the Sunday New York American.

"The Sunday American delivery room is independent of the daily department of either paper and is capable of handling 1,500,000 'full inserts.' The papers are delivered direct to this department from the presses by Dispatch Conveyors and are distributed through the room by Standard Belt Conveyors passing all insert tables.

"In handling the finished product dispatch carriers convey the printed papers direct and the delivery room is immediately above the shipping platform.

"The papers from any given press can be delivered to the mailers inside the delivery room, or else to the driver outside the delivery counters, where they are bundled and dropped into Standard spiral chutes leading direct to the tailboards of the delivery trucks.

"Ample space has been arranged for the backing up of delivery trucks inside the building. Fourteen trucks can be accommodated at one time with exits on two streets to assure celerity of 'getaway' in the delivery to the newsstands of the various editions. On the mezzanine floor above the press room is the stereotype room.

"Double Junior Autoplates are used exclusively and arrangements have been perfected whereby six of them can be handled at once.

"The plates from the stereotype room go automatically from the finishing machines to standard conveyers carrying them between, and parallel to, the lines of presses.

"When the run is finished the conveyers are reversed and take the plates directly back for remelting.

"The composing room is on the sixth floor and here is assembled a battery of 80 linotype machines, one hundred and ten make-up tables, four Ludlow units and four Lanston material casters.

"Dry mats are used exclusively in the new plant.

"The Evening Journal editorial room adjoins the composing room. Here is found the city department, the telegraph and cable departments, while in adjoining rooms are the society, real estate and other feature sections and departments of the paper.

"A special 'fudge' or late news linotype department adjoins the telegraph department on the opposite side of the composing room from the sporting department.

"Here telegraph operators receive copy alongside the linotype machines and hand it direct to the printers.

"The bevel linotype slugs, assembled in the 'fudges,' are dropped in rapid conveyers to the press room, between the two lines of 'starter' presses, thus enabling a press to start delivering papers in less than one minute after the last word of the news has come off the telegraph wires.

"On the sixth floor is also located the biographical department or 'morgue.' "

The building was designed by Charles E. Birge, in collaboration with George E. Pancoast, chief managing engineer, for the past 38 years associated with the Hearst newspaper property activities, who handled the plant layout and equipment.

Others active in the construction work are Ralph Chambers, consulting engineer on the foundations and Meyer, Strong & Jones, engineers.

MODEL SMALL CITY PLANT OCCUPIED BY BROWNSVILLE (TEX.) DAILY HERALD

THE Brownsville (Tex.) Herald, one of the oldest small city daily newspapers in Texas, has just occupied its new plant, erected and owned by the Brownsville Herald Publishing Company.

Coincident with the occupancy of the new structure, the paper abandoned its eight-page Duplex flat bed press for a sixteen-page, decker type Duplex, claimed to be the first rotary press to be installed by any newspaper between Houston, Tex., and Mexico City, a distance by rail of about 1,200 miles.

The Herald was established July 4, 1892, by the late Jesse O. Wheeler, who continued its publication until his death in 1907, when his widow, Mrs. Frances J. Wheeler assumed active editorial and business control. She had been associated with her husband in the production of the paper since it was established. Mrs. Wheeler continued to conduct the paper until August 1, 1924, when her interests were purchased by J. M. Stein, present president and publisher. Mr. Stein had been connected with the paper since 1912, at which time he was employed as a reporter.

Associated with Stein is Charles A. Reil, former Minnesota newspaper man, secretary of the company and advertising manager; Harry L. Sexton, former South Dakota newspaper man and at one time secretary of the democratic executive committee of South Dakota, as editorial writer and staff correspondent; Hartwell G. Stilwell, news editor; Frank Bulloch, circulation manager, D. R. Cooper, formerly of Waco, mechanical superintendent, and William Brown, press room foreman.

BALTIMORE DAILIES EXPANDING PLANT

Sun and Evening Sun Preparing Next Door Building for Occupancy —To Add Press Units— Installing Cafeteria

Work has been started on extensive alterations and improvements in the building of the A. S. Abell Co., publishers of the Baltimore Sun and Evening Sun of which Paul Patterson is the president.

Properties adjoining the Sun building at the southwest corner of Baltimore and Charles streets in the center of business Baltimore have been acquired. The front of the property adjoining on Baltimore street will be altered to make it conform to the Greek facade of the building as it now stands. The buildings added to the plant will be almost rebuilt.

When finished, the alterations will have provided:

Spaces for four additional presses. These units, in conjunction with the spare units now installed, will supply a 75 per cent increase in the press capacity of the two papers.

Addition of 40,000 square feet of floor space for use of the composing room.

Practically double the amount of space assigned to the use of the news and editorial departments.

Installation of a modern cafeteria capable of taking care of 200 employes at a time.

New elevator, new space for the room used by the board of directors.

Additional space for all these departments has been made essential by the steady growth in the number of employes of the Sun papers—the total regularly engaged now exceeds 1,000.

GOLF WRITERS ELECT

A. Linde Fowler of the Boston (Mass.) Transcript, has been chosen a member of the executive committee of the National Association of Golf Writers. At the elections in Minneapolis recently, the following officers were chosen: President, H. L. Salsinger, Detroit News; vice-president, Francis J. FIFTY INDICTED IN JULIAN OIL CASE FOLLOWING REPORTER'S EXPOSÉ

Morris Lavine of Los Angeles Examiner Discovered Over-Issue of Stock Amounting to 4,250,000 Shares—Company Played with Millions

MORRIS LAVINE, star reporter for the Los Angeles Examiner, is being given credit for the recent exposé of the Julian Petroleum Corporation of Los Angeles, which precipitated one of the greatest financial crashes on the coast and resulted in the indictment of 50 prominent persons including the president of one bank the president of, the First Securities Company, several other bankers, motion picture magnates and business men.

MORRIS LAVINE

Lavine's exposé, which started July 24 and ran for eight days exclusively in the Examiner, showed:

That 4,250,000 shares of Julian Petroleum Corporation stock were overissued in Los Angeles, San Francisco and New York in a little more than a year.

That $67,000,000 were banked and toyed with in the handling of the stock by one man alone.

That S. C. Lewis, a Texas attorney and promoter, came to Los Angeles, and without paying one cent promoted a star promoter, C. C. Julian, into turning over an $8,500,000 corporation for nothing.

That he purchased a brokerage house, paying $700,000 for its good name, and used this house to have signatures on stock certificates guaranteed and passed on to the buying public.

That shrewd business men lost from a half million to a million dollars.

The evidence in the case, presented to the county grand jury, lasted six solid weeks, and took 4,500,000 words to tell. At the end of the investigation the grand jury indicted S. C. Lewis, president of the company, and his associate, Jack Bennett, a "very bright young man" of New York, who handled the $67,000,000 raised for stock operations. It indicted the officers of the stock brokerage house, and one junior vice-president and loan officer of one of the banks, and charged them with responsibility for the overissue.

Then it proceeded to indict 41 other prominent men—bankers, brokers and business men in all walks of life—charging them with conspiracy to commit usury in advances made to the company for pool operations. Many of these men returned the money to the receivers for the company to continue its operations since that time.

The bankers, the president of the Pacific Southwest Trust and Savings Bank, Charles F. Stern, and John E. Barber, the president of the First Securities Company, were indicted on charges of violating the state banking law for accepting $100,000 "expenses" from S. C. Lewis.

Lavine's exposé of these conditions and transactions ran from ten to twenty columns a day. It started with two columns on the front page each day, broke over to all of page two and very often parts of pages three and four. The Examiner backed up each statement by the sworn secret evidence of the county grand jury.

Long before the Julian Petroleum crash Lavine began investigating the case at the instigation of George C. Young, publisher of the Examiner, and Fred W. Eldridge, editor.

He discovered that there was an overissue of Julian stock. He found that millions of shares had been distributed beyond the capitalization. He learned that pool operations were netting huge and perhaps usurious profits to individuals. He went into consultation with the firm of Loeb, Walker & Loeb, attorneys who represent the Los Angeles Stock Exchange, who ordered the stock taken off the Exchange. He also took up the matter with the district attorney who began an investigation of all the facts in the case, presenting them to the county grand jury.

At the conclusion of the investigation by the grand jury 55 indictments were returned, naming 50 prominent individuals (some being indicted more than once which accounts for the 55 indictments).

Lavine was thoroughly familiar with all the evidence presented to the grand jury because of his investigation followed by his co-operation with the officials. The secret testimony had been taken down by a court reporter. This was the data Lavine needed to corroborate his exposé. Through his political and friendly connections he secured the first copy of the grand jury transcript to leave the hall of justice. He then wrote his stories of his investigation, supporting it by the grand jury sworn testimony.

Morris Lavine has a long list of exclusive stories to his credit. He captured Clara Phillips in Honduras after the police failed, persuaded her to return without extradition and took her to San Quentin prison, where she is now confined. He exposed a plot to blackmail Fatty Arbuckle. He captured Harry J. Dunlap, notorious badge bandit now in Folsom penitentiary. He helped to locate John K. Fronk, the "Ponzi of Hollywood," now in San Quentin. He got a confession from Herbert Wilson, notorious mail bandit, which resulted in the federal indictment of 27 companions of Wilson, some of whom are now in the federal penitentiary as a result. He got the first and only interview with Kenneth G. Ormiston, radio operator in the Aimee Semple McPherson case, telling of Ormiston's movements.

PAUL BLOCK BUYS A BASEBALL CLUB

Recent Purchaser of Merged Pittsburgh Post-Gazette Buys Newark (N. J.) Bears at Auction for $360,000 —Club in Bankruptcy

In addition to newspapers, Paul Block, president of Paul Block, Inc., chairman of the board of Pictorial Review, and chain newspaper publisher, buys baseball teams on occasion.

An occasion arose this week, and Mr. Block, one of whose newspapers is the Newark (N. J.) Star-Eagle, stepped over to that Jersey city on Wednesday and bought at auction the Newark Bears, a team in the International League. He paid $360,000.

The club was sold at auction at David's Stadium, where the "Bears" play, by Percy Reeves, receiver in equity appointed by the federal court. In addition to the price paid for the club, Mr. Block agreed to assume an obligation of $147,000, which citizens of Newark subscribed last year to help the team out of financial difficulties.

Arthur Brisbane in his "Today" column quoted Mr. Block as saying that since baseball profits are a by-product of the newspapers, a newspaper might as well own the ball team.

Mr. Block's most recent newspaper acquisition was the Pittsburgh (Pa.) Post-Gazette. His other papers include the Toledo Blade and the Duluth Herald and the Lancaster New Era.

LEAGUE PRESS MEET JOURNALISM LOCARNO

So Declares Karl Bickel, U. P. President, in Berlin Speech—Says Delegates Discovered Their Interdependence

The recent International Press Conference at Geneva was a Locarno of international journalism, Karl A. Bickel, president of the United Press Associations declared at a banquet given in his honor by the annual conference of the German Newspaper Publishers' Association, Sept. 4.

Representatives of the German government and the American embassy were present.

"I can never forget that the honor done me is a tangible demonstration of the growing relationship between the press of Germany and the United States," Mr. Bickel said.

"Germanic culture always has played a great part in the history of journalism. The Occidental conception of printing press work is German, and the Bavarian banking house of Fugger organized and operated the first successful and comprehensive news collecting and distribution organization in history.

"I have just left Geneva, where the first international conference of press experts was held.

"Nothing could have demonstrated more clearly the international character of journalism. We discovered our utter interdependence and the necessity for co-operation. It was a veritable Locarno of international journalism.

"It may shortly be our good fortune to welcome some of our German colleagues to America. They will be most cordially welcomed. It will be a great personal pleasure for the United Press to assist in making their trip successful.

"The press of Germany and America have much in common. Both have been victorious in a fight for the right of complete freedom, which is an indication that the historical relations of our countries has been restored."

Bickel proposed a toast to the German president, people, and newspapers.

Dr. Adolph Krumbhaar, chairman of the Association, in welcoming Mr. Bickel, said:

"For the first time in the history of this Association we have the honor to receive a prominent guest from the United States.

"Your presence is evidence of friendship and desire for friendlier, more intimate relations between our two nations by personal contact betwen leading men of the press.

"Inasmuch as men of the press of our two countries are thus beginning to know each other I hope that shortly Mr. Bickel will have the opportunity of meeting some of us in the United States, where we are going to see with our own eyes the institutions created by the great American press and get into personal touch with publishers and editors of American newspapers."

Dr. Krumbhaar proposed the health of the United States, of President Coolidge, and of Mr. Bickel.

Mr. Bickel will remain abroad for about a month before returning to this country.

CHICAGO EXPATRIATES GIVE DURKIN A RING

"LET'S give Jim Durkin a ring," said one of a group of New York newspaper men this week. All in the party had formerly worked on Chicago newspapers, and to them, as to many others, James Aloysius Durkin, was well known.

And so after the crowd had chipped in and each in turn had said their greetings to "Jim" by long distance telephone, they began to reminisce.

Durkin is head office boy of the Chicago Tribune. He handles every telephone call that comes into the editorial rooms of the newspaper and nothing gets by him that the news writers should know. If a tipster tries to be anonymous over the telephone, Durkin keeps him engaged in conversation until he traces the call. Several years ago, Durkin was sent to London to show the newspapers there how Americans use the telephone.

NEWS STAFFS CO-ORDINATED

Grafton Wilcox Head of Subsidiary Departments on N. Y. Herald Tribune

A co-ordination of the subsidiary news departments of the New York Herald Tribune has been effected by bringing them all under the general supervision of Grafton S. Wilcox, assistant managing editor. This will imply no change in policy or direction, but is designed to facilitate the orderly movement of copy into the composing room and a closer adherence to a time schedule, which will prevent extraordinary demands on the composing and press room forces.

In addition to general news, Mr. Wilcox will have supervision of the following Sunday sections: Third News section, Drama and Music, Sports, Rotogravure, Radio, Society, Real Estate, Comics and Junior Magazine.

LIBEL SUIT POSTPONED

Action Against Tulsa Daily World Advanced to October 18

(By Telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla., Sept. 7.—The libel suit brought by Justice Fletcher Riley of the Oklahoma supreme court against the Tulsa Daily World for publication of articles in connection with the O. O. Owens contempt case, was postponed until Oct. 18.

The World printed an article by Owens, member of the legislature in October of last year during the election attacking the state supreme court. The paper also printed four advertisements. Riley names the paper, Eugene Lorton, editor, and Owens as defendants.

Detroit is third in building in America; The News is Detroit's building medium

AMERICA'S fourth city has the distinction of being the third in the value of buildings constructed during the first six months of 1927.

During 1926 building construction in Detroit amounted to $183,721,438, not including the value of the land. It was third in building in 1926 and is third for the first half of 1927. During last year $103,384,805 was spent in dwelling construction alone.

This gives some idea what a wonder market Detroit is for building and insulating advertisers, and particularly since Detroit can be thoroughly covered by one newspaper.

Five of the six insulation advertisers in the Detroit field use The Detroit News; three of them employing The News exclusively. The local builders— those on the ground—place the bulk of their advertising in The Detroit News. During the first half of 1927 The News carried 16,000 lines more builders' advertising than both competitors combined.

Through the use of The Detroit News, alone, advertisers can get the maximum returns at the lowest cost per unit of sale—a fact well known to insulation and building advertisers.

BOSTON MANAGING EDITOR TAKING NEWSPAPER STUDY TOUR

Harold F. Wheeler, Boston Traveler, on Trip to Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Cincinnati, and Columbus to See How Other Papers Operate

By PHILIP SCHUYLER

"DESKITIS" is a disease dreaded by all managing editors, and, indeed, an all too prevalent ailment in America, according to students of the craft.

Harold F. Wheeler, managing editor of the Boston (Mass.) Traveler, is fighting the plague successfully, as far as he himself is concerned. Quite familiar with the inside of his own city room, composing room, and private niche, he is at present shaking off a touch of "deskitis" by looking beyond the Yankee horizon, at the same time, he said, making sure that his paper doesn't lose the local flavor and become "smart aleck" or dandified.

This week Mr. Wheeler was found by an EDITOR & PUBLISHER reporter at the office of the United Press in New York, where he said he was on the beginning of a study tour he intended to make to newspapers in Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Cincinnati and Columbus.

"I like to see how the other fellows are operating," Mr. Wheeler said.

It was not the first trip of the sort he has taken since he became managing editor of the Traveler five years ago, succeeding Moses Williams. In that time he also has been to the Pacific Coast on a similar mission. True, he has always been a Boston newspaper man himself, and has that so-called typical Massachusetts attitude against any radical changes.

"I don't like to make any sudden big changes," he explained. "After all, I feel that a newspaper should be treated like one's home. You want your readers to become familiar with it, to know it inside out. Of course if you find something good, adopt it, but then stick to it.

"Our motto on the Traveler is to make the paper easy to read because it is easy to find things in it."

While the managing editor of the Traveler is restless and anxious always to be seeking new ways of doing the old things outside the state, he urges the same spirit confined to the local field on his staff.

"I like my reporters to keep on the move," he said. "I want them to be in crowds, to be perpetually on the lookout to discover what people are reading, thinking, and doing. There is nothing better than crowd contact to assist in editing a newspaper, the medium of the crowd.

"I believe that the story the crowd tells is about the same in one city as another. You can find a small-town crowd in the world's biggest city, New York.

"At least I don't imagine that super-sophisticated people would bother to pay a dime to peep through a cheap telescope at the moon, and I saw crowds doing that near the Times Square district in New York this week.

"Too often a paper in trying not to be provincial will go to the other extreme and become smart aleck. And I don't believe it pays."

Boston's prudery has been press-agented recently by H. L. Mencken and Upton Sinclair. Wheeler has proved to his own satisfaction that the people of that New England city were decent enough to frown on the Browning-Browning smut and to praise a paper that played censor on itself to the extent of keeping that story out of its columns while the opposition was playing it all over Page One.

The Traveler started running the story on page one when the famous White Plains trial began. Wheeler heard men in his own office say they didn't care to take the paper home with them because of the "honk honk" testimony it contained.

"What a futile job this is," reasoned Wheeler. "If my own workers won't take the paper home—."

The first edition of the paper was on the streets with the Browning story in lead position. Wheeler grabbed the telephone on his desk and got the make-up editor in the composing room.

"Throw out the Browning story," he said. "I'm writing an apology to be played in a box on the first page in its place."

The boxed apology as written assured readers of the Traveler that that newspaper would not print any more accounts of the Browning trial.

"Within 30 minutes after the second edition was out," Wheeler said this week, "we received telephone calls of congratulations. Altogether we received thousands of letters commending our stand, and not one single complaint. When the story was over we noted an increase in circulation."

As has probably been the experience in other cities, Wheeler said one of the biggest circulation winning stories of the year was the Lindbergh flight.

"Our biggest day this year, however," he said, "was when the supreme court ruled against Sacco and Vanzetti. Then we went to 236,000, a few thousand over the Lindbergh high."

Wheeler started newspaper work in Boston 19 years ago. He is 39 years old now. His first job was on the Traveler as a reporter, but he left the paper after two years to work for the Boston Journal under the Frank A. Munsey ownership. He also was on the staff of the Boston Post. Seven years ago he was made Sunday editor of the Boston Herald and in 1922 became managing editor of the Traveler.

When he was on the Post he wrote a life of General Pershing which was widely syndicated.

DENIES DAILY'S CHARGE

Gov. Jackson of Indiana Replies to Indianapolis Times Story

(By Telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Sept. 6.—Statements that Governor Ed Jackson made offers to Warren T. McCray, then governor, to bring about the appointment of James E. McDonald as prosecuting attorney of Marion county during the time that Jackson was Secretary of State and when McCray had just been indicted, today were declared by Governor Jackson to be false. The Governor's statement was issued soon after he returned to the executive offices after a week spent with his family on a vacation in northern Indiana.

The statement that Jackson had offered McCray $10,000 for attorney's fees and immunity from conviction if the latter would appoint McDonald instead of William H. Remy, present prosecutor, when William Evans, McCray's son-in-law, resigned the post, was branded as untrue in a letter which Governor Jackson addressed to Boyd Gurley, editor of the Indianapolis Times, which published the charge in a copyrighted story some weeks ago. Governor Jackson, admitting that he did ask for McDonald's appointment, said that he was informed by McCray that Remy already had been decided upon. Jackson also declared that he had no personal interest in the matter.

Governor Jackson was asked to waive any immunity that might be granted to him through the statute of limitations, and go before the Marion County Grand Jury to relate his story of his efforts to have James E. McDonald appointed prosecuting attorney in 1923, in a letter sent to him Wednesday by Mr. Gurley.

The editor said:

"Your letter, for the first time, places a judicial conclusion upon certain statements made by the Times for which I assume full responsibility. You state that I charged that you had offered a bribe. The Times did not attempt to put a legal construction upon certain definite acts which it states occurred on December 8, 1923, and in which it states you participated. You stated that the charge is untrue and the statement false. If your statement is true, then I, as editor of the Times, have violated the laws. If the proper tribunals should decide that the evidence on which I printed that statement is as convincing to them as it was to me, then they can apply the remedy under your own interpretation of the legal meaning of these facts. One of us has been guilty, and is guilty.

"Will you go to that Grand Jury and repeat to it under oath what you have written to me?

"There has been guilt. If your statement be correct, not only myself but those who furnished me with evidence should not be at liberty.

"I am presuming that you are as deeply interested in giving the people the truth, and all the truth, as I am."

Better Service Means More Profit

Making its appeal directly to the far-sighted newspaper executive who is building for steady, healthy growth, the Ludlow system is constantly advancing in popularity.

Long ago a majority of the great newspapers of the country accepted the Ludlow as standard equipment for improving the quality and power of their advertisements, and every year the list of Ludlow users keeps growing impressively.

When the Ludlow is on the job, more composition is turned out, work is handled more easily, and advertisers are better satisfied with results secured from their ads.

Familiarize yourself with this powerful factor in making your advertisements worth more to your advertisers—which means more business for you. This information will cost you nothing.

Ludlow typelines are slug-cast from hand-set matrices in sizes from 6 to full-width 72 pt. caps and lower-case and even 84 pt. caps, without mold or machine changes.

"JUST PAPER TALK," SAYS "A" TO "Q," NOT A WORD OF IT IS TRUE

"Let's Say the Subways Blew Up Today," Say the Reporters—And Bomb Outrage Follows, According to Evening Post Man

By NUNNALLY JOHNSON

("Minstrel Columnist" of the New York Evening Post)

THE following questions are to put to newspaper men so often that there must be widespread interest in the answers, which are offered here:

Q. Say, you're a newspaper man, is there anything in all these newspaper stories about Coolidge not running again? (Or in all these newspaper stories about the subway explosions? Or in all these newspaper stories about the possibility of a coal strike?)

A. No, nothing at all. Newspapers just print stories like those because they've got to print something, you know. They don't mean any harm by it, of course. And even when there is something behind one of them, the newspapers wouldn't print the facts. Don't be silly! The real low-down is, when a newspaper finds a dull day, it asks all of its reporters whether they can't think up a good story. One of them says he can, and presently he says:

"Why not print a story saying that the President issued a slip of paper announcing his decision not to run for President in 1928?" Or else a lot of reporters get together and say, "Let's say the subway blew up today." They get the police and the two subway corporations to come in on the game and twenty or thirty people volunteer to be knocked cuckoo by flying debris, and there the newspapers are—all set with good stuff for the front pages! But in the event that the subway actually did blow up, the reporters and editors all get together and decide to print a story to the effect that the kangaroo in the zoo gave birth to twins, just to throw the readers off the scent. This is known as journalism.

Q. Isn't that all newspaper talk?

A. Oh, absolutely! Every morning when the city room opens, the city editor calls all of the men together and says:

"Fellows, let's have some newspaper talk today. When the district men call in, tell them not to bother about the police stations or hospitals today; tell them to get together and have some newspaper talk with each other. You rewrite men just close your desks and we'll have some good snappy newspaper talk right here in the office."

"Presently some subject comes up in the newspaper talk that strikes the editors as being completely silly and impossible, and immediately a man is set to work to write a nice long article of newspaper talk. No facts are printed during that day and not even Dr. John Roach Straton is able to break into the newspapers. Newspaper talk is the order of the day.

Q. Well, what are the newspapers going to do for news now that the —— case is finished?

A. To tell the truth, nobody knows. Everybody is all up in the air. While the —— case was running the papers had good front page stories all the time, but now that it is finished, the Lord only knows what they'll be able to print. It was like that after the Snyder-Gray case. Everybody said, "Well, now that the Snyder-Gray case is ended, what are you newspaper boys going to do for stuff to put on your front pages?" And everybody remembers that these sharp observers had the right dope, all right.

For weeks after the Snyder-Gray case the papers all had to give up printing front pages, because, just as everybody said, there wasn't anything to print there. The fellows all sat around and thought and thought and thought, but they couldn't think of a thing to put on the front pages. Right now it's like that; what on earth are the newspapers going to have to put on the front pages after the Sacco-Vanzetti case ends!

Q. Say, tell the truth, where do you boys get all that stuff you print, anyway?

A. Why, we just sit around and make it up—say, I'm tired of answering these sap questions. Are you the same fellow that asked the others?

Q. Yes.

A. Well, I might as well tell you now, I think you're a great big stiff—and what do you think of that?

Q. Why, how dare you—

A. Come on, now; none of that kind of talk to me. I'm writing this column. I don't have to take any impertinence from a little old "Q" that I myself made up. Why, you little old "Q" you! The very idea of your saying, "How dare you!" I've got a good mind to horsewhip you for talking back to me! Get down on your knees, you "Q" you! Quick—or I'll—

Q. Mercy, master, mercy! Don't strike me!

A. The very idea of your saying "How dare you!" to me—me, who, typewrote you into existence! I've never in all my life—down, dog, down! Down on your knees and apologize!

Q. I apologize, master! Mercy! Please don't strike me with that cat o'nine tails!

A. That's better! Don't ever forget yourself again, slave. Always remember that I'm the one that's writing this column—not you. I'm in command here. What I say goes. Keep that in mind—and get back up and we'll continue the dialogue. Go ahead.

Q. Say, you newspaper boys get to meet a lot of very interesting people—oh, oh, oh, master, don't strike me—oh, oh, oh—mercy! Mercy!

A. Ask me any more sap questions, will you!

INLAND SURVEYS BUS RATES

Association Finds Wide Range in Costs of Transportation

Cost of delivering newspaper bundles by public bus lines range from 29 cents to 10 per 100 pounds, according to survey made by the Inland Daily Press Association, and made public this week by Wil V. Tufford, secretary.

"These newspapers," the report says, "are shipping an average of 1,486 pounds of papers a day at an average cost of $1.1 per hundred pounds. The two routes on which the cost is $5 and $10 are routes being subsidized by the newspapers to maintain service. The rate most generally paid was $1 per 100 pounds, with 50 cents a hundred, second, and $2 a hundred third.

On a basis of cost per mile, the range was from .1 of a cent to 8 cents.

Laying Hearthstones with Real Estate Ads

WHEN a person leaves home he searches for a dwelling-place which can be transformed into a home of cheerfulness and comfort, and, unless he is unusually prosperous, he continues to do this for several years. The bachelor has too many engagements to search through pages of hazy ads for his ideal home—the newly married are too bewildered—the sophisticated, long-married, are too busy to hunt for houses when the ads are not easy to find and easy to read. Therefore The Distinguished Newspaper relieves its readers' home-finding problems by making its real estate ads easy to find, easy to read, and suggestive of the comfort and bright cheerfulness of the ideal home.

The Distinguished Newspaper has two objectives in view when planning these newspaper ads:—to please its readers' eyes and desires and to be economical. Both are achieved by the use of Linotype facilities. Their economy is unquestioned—therefore publishers can emphasize pleasing the reader. The old bugaboo of exorbitant cost is gone!

The great advantages of using Linotype facilities as regards betterment of typographical dress of real estate ads are shown on the two inside pages. Linotype means economy—economy means better ad treatment—which in turn assures the laying of permanent hearthstones with real estate ads.

DIRECT MAIL ADVERTISERS WASTING $600,000 YEARLY, POST OFFICE SAYS

Obsolete Mailing Lists and Failure to Use Return Cards Blamed in Report—12,000,000 Circulars Sent First Class Destroyed in 1926

INSTEAD of finding live buyers, 12,688,567 advertising circulars valued at more than $600,000 found their way into the dead letter office in 1926, First Assistant Postmaster General John H. Bartlett announced in Washington Sept. 6. Use of obsolete mailing lists and failure of advertisers to employ return cards was the cause of this waste, he said.

Mr. Bartlett's statement was made in connection with a memorandum outlining the plans of the Post Office Department for a campaign of personal solicitation in an effort to reduce the weight of return mail and dead letters which accrue from third-class matter. Advertising matter, Mr. Bartlett said, furnished more than 50 per cent of the dead letter handled in 1926.

Postmasters, it was explained, will be instructed to interview business men in the effort to lighten the load, and correspondence will be undertaken directly by the Post Office Department with advertising houses.

The full text of the statement follows:

"The direct-mail advertisers of the United States in the year 1926 wasted, literally threw away, over $600,000, through the use of obsolete mailing lists combined with the failure of the advertisers to use return cards on their envelopes.

"These figures, however, include only advertisers who mailed their circulars under first class postage. A very much larger amount was lost by advertisers who used third class postage; but it cannot, however, be estimated, since a separate record is not kept of undeliverable third class matter disposed of as waste by postmasters.

"Undelivered first class matter all goes to the dead letter office, where definite records are maintained to show the quantity of each class of mail received and its disposition. Undeliverable third class matter is not sent to the dead letter office, but is disposed of as waste at post offices of address.

"The records of the Post Office Department show that during the year, 12,688.567 letters contained circulars and advertising matter, all mailed as first class matter, were disposed of as waste by the dead letter service. Figured at five cents each to cover the cost of material, printing, labor and postage, the total amounts to $633,428.35.

"This advertising matter furnished over 50 per cent of all the dead letters handled during the year.

"Two reasons may be assigned for at least 95 per cent of all these letters being sent to the dead letter office; first, incorrect addresses, due to the use of obsolete mailing lists, and second, the use of envelopes without return cards, both in spite of the Post Office Department's constant and urgent advice to the contrary.

"As a result of this situation having been called to the attention of the Postmaster General, a campaign has been inaugurated to persuade direct-mail advertisers to use return cards on their envelopes and thus materially minimize their losses through this avenue. It is the opinion of officials of the Post Office Department that hundreds of thousands of dollars annually can be saved by advertisers by the use of return cards on their envelopes instead of mailing them out blank as is practiced by many of them, and that the advantages gained through the use of return cards would more than offset any possible disadvantages.

"The Department's view is that with few exceptions all sealed letters bearing first class postage are opened by their recipients whether or not the envelope bears the cards of the mailers, and that once opened the contents will receive the same attention regardless of the nature of the envelope.

"One of the arguments put forth by the Department in favor of the use of return cards on circular mail is that the return of the non-deliveries, for which there is no charge for prepaid first-class matter bearing a return request, would enable the mailer to know at once how many of his circulars had been delivered and to eliminate from his list the incorrect addresses, thereby avoiding further waste of material, postage and labor in subsequent mailings.

"It would also save him expense in having his mailing lists corrected at the local post offices, for instead of sending in his complete list for correction, he would need to send in only a list of the non-deliveries which had been returned to him. Further, the returned advertising matter, often rather expensive, could be used again if undated and not of a seasonable nature.

"It would also enable many advertisers to find out how carelessly their clerks address these letters—hundreds of thousands of them are mailed with incomplete addresses, the name of the addressee or the post office or the State having been omitted by the typist.

"Under the practice of using non-card or blank envelopes the mailer has no means of knowing how many of his circulars or ads have failed of delivery and been disposed of as waste by the dead letter office. As an example of this, last October the Washington dead letter office destroyed over 50,000 circulars from one mailing of a large eastern firm mailed in non-card envelopes but sealed under first-class postage. Their waste in one mailing was not less than $2,500.

"Not only are direct-mail advertisers wasting a great deal of money every year by using plain envelopes, but the records of the dead letter office show that thousands of individuals, corporations and business firms lose large sums of good hard cash in this way. A typical instance came to notice in the Washington dead letter office a few days ago.

"An undeliverable letter was received containing a draft for $55,600. It was returned to the mailer through information made available when it was opened; but someone lost the interest on $55,600 for about 15 days, amounting to $139, figured at 6 per cent.

"Practically all this would have been saved had the mailer used an envelope bearing his return card. It is surprising the number of such cases involving large amounts.

"Out of the 25,000,000 odd dead letters handled last year, over 1,000,000 contained valuable enclosures. The money, drafts, checks and money orders contained in these amounted to some $5,317,000, and while practically all the drafts, checks and money orders were eventually returned to the writers, and all but about $40,000 of the money, through information found within the letters, they all lost an average of 15 days' time, which at 6 per cent interest on the whole amount means a loss of more than $13,290, all through the use of non-card envelopes.

"The astonishing thing to the Post Office Department is that in spite of all that has been said, published, and brought to the attention of mailers in regard to the losses they are sustaining through failure to use return cards, so many apparently otherwise intelligent business men continue to throw their good money away by this method.

"And since columns of publicity through the press and the daily Postal Bulletins have evidently failed to awaken the American advertisers to their shortsightedness, it is now proposed to take up each case personally with the individual through correspondence and personal interviews by postmasters and representatives of the postal service."

CLAIMS PLAY STOLEN

R. H. Rodhe, Former News Man Seeks to Enjoin "The Spider"

Robert H. Rohde, newspaperman and magazine writer, filed suit on Sept. 6 in the United States District Court charging that the plot of "The Spider," current Broadway production, was plagiarized from a story written by him and published in Popular Magazine. His story was called "The Great Macumber" and ran serially between January, 1916, and February, 1917. The suit demands that Charles Fulton Oursler and Lowell Brentano, playwrights; Albert Lewis, Sam H. Harris and Irving Berlin, managers, the Shubert Theatre Corporation and 27 actors be restrained from further production of the show, which Rohde says, is in violation of copyrights of his story.

Mr. Rohde was formerly on the staff of the New York Tribune, and is a contributor to several fiction magazines.

LABOR CHIEF DECORATES FRANKLIN STATUE

HOW SMALL CITY DAILY BUILT ITS MORGUE

File of Local Material Obtained by Sending Questionnaires to Leading Citizens—Reporters Also Aided

Like many other small city dailies, the Brownwood (Tex.) Bulletin struggled along for years without any other "morgue" than a few desk drawers full of feature service mats and press association obituaries.

No local clippings were filed, and the only method by which local stories of past years could be found was by feverishly searching through dusty and often incomplete files.

In an effort to build up a local reference department quickly and accurately, a scheme was worked out by W. C. Stewart, city editor, which proved very successful. An information blank was printed and mailed to prominent citizens with a letter explaining why the information was requested.

The letter follows:

"We constantly have occasion to mention the prominent citizens of Brownwood in the Bulletin, and you are nummered among these.

"We will appreciate your co-operation in enabling us to give better service, which you may do by filling out the enclosed blank, and mailing to us in the enclosed, stamped envelope.

"The Bulletin is not asking for this information in an attitude of curiosity or prying, but merely in order that when we have occasion to mention your name in a news story we will be sure that the facts are absolutely correct. You will not only save Bulletin reporters much trouble and insure accuracy, but will also save yourself from interruption and bother at times when we may need the information.

"Thanking you, etc."

The enclosed blank was headed "Information Blank for the Private Files of The Bulletin."

The information requested ranged from name and age to church, army and lodge affiliations and including questions as to marriage, schools attended and business or profession engaged in.

A large number of the blanks were returned to the Bulletin. After allowing a reasonable time for the answers to be received, reporters were sent to the more important men and women who did not return the blanks.

In this way much information was obtained which would never have been added to the morgue through the ordinary channels open to the librarian.

TO NEGOTIATE REPORTERS' SCALE

Scranton Newswriters Union to Meet with Publishers Soon

The Newswriters' Union of Scranton, Pa., is preparing to meet with the publishers in the near future to discuss a wage scale for the coming year. The present agreement between the union and publishers expires on the last of this month. The present minimum scale for five-year reporters in Scranton is $56 a week.

It is understood the reporters are to ask for a wage increase along with a few changes in working conditions. The new scale will be negotiated by the executive committee and the publishers' committee.

STEEP RETURNS TO U. S.

Thomas Steep, correspondent in the Orient for the New York Herald Tribune, since the fall of 1926, has returned to this country as a result of a physical breakdown.

Mr. Steep left this country with Mrs. Steep in June 1926, when he accompanied the Carmi Thompson expedition to the Philippines. He arrived in Seattle late in August, and is now resting in Oregon. He expects to return east shortly, and will probably go back on the local staff in a month or two.

Statistical Rating of Arizona Counties and Cities for Products of General Appeal, in Six Major Classes of Quality and Cost—An Original Simplified and Tested Formula from Basic Data

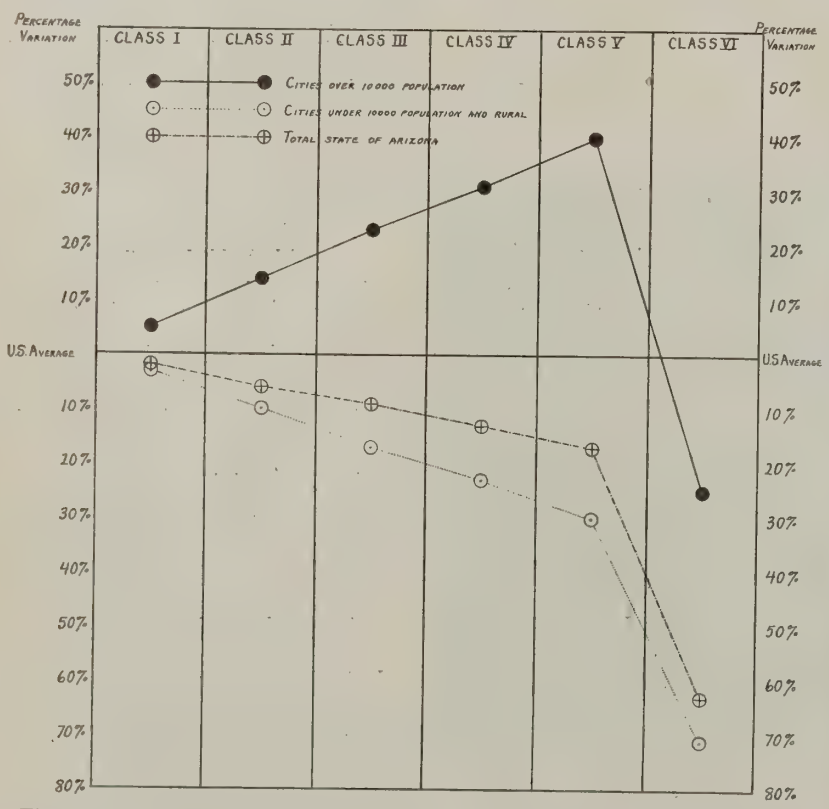
ARIZONA, the 19th state to be noted in EDITOR & PUBLISHER'S weekly series analyzing the consumer-buying ability of the several states, as another commonwealth of great area, sparse rural population and total lack of metropolitan districts, presents a picture of ability to buy necessities and moderate priced luxuries above the average.

Only three cities in the state are shown as having more than 10,000 population and the desert character of some wide-spreading counties is indicated by their low figures in the table below.

The figures represent the buying ability of the localities for materials and services ranging from necessities to the highest-priced luxuries. By placing a decimal point four places from the right, the figure is the percentage borne by the county or city to the entire United States market. For instance, the state of Arizona, for necessities, presents .3519 per cent of the national market; for the highest-priced luxuries it presents .1336 per cent of the whole country market.

The computation is based upon a weighted average of population, according to U. S. Census reports, and number of all income tax returns. In the sixth class—highest priced luxuries—the income tax return factor is the number of returns on incomes of more than $10,000.



The weights are varied. In Class I (necessities and bulk staples) population weighs 90 and income 10 percent. In Class II (advertised staples and higher priced necessities), the weights are population, 70; income 30. In Class III (low priced luxuries and medium priced staple goods), the weights are population 50, income 50. In Class IV, where price is a definite factor, population is weighed at 30 and income at 70. In Class V, high priced luxuries, population is weighed at 10 and income at 90. In Class VI, the super de luxe area, the same weights apply, with incomes as defined above.

Fisher Body Using Extensive Newspaper List—Endicott-Johnson Reports Increased Shipments—Family Products Company Changes Name

AN extensive list of newspapers has been selected for the advertising of Fisher Body Company, through MacManus, Inc., Detroit. Black and white schedules will run 980 lines 12 times and 616 lines 10 times, starting immediately and running to until June, 1928. Rotogravure schedules to run 980 lines 12 times. As a rule, one paper in a town will be used, size of schedule to depend on amount of General Motors cars sold in the town.

Endicott Johnson Corporation reports shipments of shoes in August as exceeding $7,000,000 or 14 per cent more than in August, 1926. Net sales for the first six months of the year were 21,600,000 pairs, a gain of 10 per cent, over the business during the same period last year.

In the future, any advertising for the accounts of Musterole, Olive Tablets and Zemo will be issued under the name of Reserve Remedy Company, with Erwin, Wasey & Company, 844 Rush street, Chicago, handling the account. The products formerly were issued on a contract for the Family Products Company, which name has been discontinued.

Reed G. Landis Company of Chicago, formerly Arnold Joerns Company, has been appointed by the Richmond Radiator Company of New York City to prepare and place advertising for Heatomat Gas Boilers. Newspapers will be used.

The Edgewater Athletic Club of Chicago has engaged the services of the Campbell-Ewald Company as advertising counsel. The account will be handled by the Chicago office of Campbell-Ewald where a direct mail campaign is being prepared.

Ted Sloat, formerly with the Fort Madison (Iowa) Evening Democrat, has been appointed to the advertising staff of the W. A. Sheaffer Pen Company. He succeeds W. Ray Smith, who has resigned to accept a position on the editorial staff of Bookbinding Magazine, New York.

The W. A. Sheaffer Pen Company has appointed The Advertising Service Company, Ltd., of Toronto and Montreal, Canada, to handle all Sheaffer magazine and newspaper advertising in Canada. The Glen Buck Company, Chicago, handles Sheaffer's domestic newspaper and magazine advertising, Dorland International of London handles the campaign in the British Isles and Dorland International of New York takes care of the Sheaffer advertising in all foreign countries except Canada and the British Isles.

Sheaffer will conduct an active newspaper campaign in Canada this fall. The company's advertising now appears in every civilized nation.

WOMEN IN ADVERTISING AND JOURNALISM

"Not for Publication," by Clara Sharpe Hough to Be Published Sept. 23—Maurine Watkins' Play "Revelry" in Philadelphia—Selma Schultz Promoted in Danville

A NEWSPAPER editor's wife has written a novel about a newspaper editor and his wife. This is the striking feature of Clara Sharpe Hough's "Not for Publication" as it will appear to newspaper folks.

CLARA SHARPE HOUGH

Mrs. Hough is herself a newspaper woman. She is one of five in the family actively engaged in the profession. With her husband, the latter's brother, and the brother's wife, she is a graduate of the Columbia University School of Journalism. Indeed, the alumni last May elected her its president.

Steeped in journalism as she is, the author determined to make her profession the background for her story. But she has not written simply a newspaper story. There is much city room atmosphere, the problems of the city editor run in and out of the story and afford highlights of the plot. But the basis of "Not for Publication" is portrayal of the marriage problems of the editor.

Mrs. Hough's "Not for Publication" is to be published by Century on Sept. 23. The same company last year published Mrs. Hough's "Leif the Lucky." Mrs. Hough is now a resident of New Bedford, Mass., where her husband, George A. Hough, Jr., is news editor of the New Bedford Standard.

Maurine Watkins' second play "Revelry" from the book by Samuel Hopkins Adams opened in Philadelphia this week, and gained considerable publicity through the storm of protest it created. Miss Watkins is a former Chicago newspaper woman. Her first play "Chicago" made a big hit in New York last season.

Grayce Druitt Latus, who conducted the travel department in the Pittsburgh Sunday Post until the recent merger, is conducting a similar department for the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette.

Miss Mabel Graves, for the past five years society editor on the Danville (Ill.) Commercial-News, was married Sept. 4, at Detroit, Mich., to Richard Tyson, former Danville resident. Miss Graves has been succeeded as society editor by Miss Selma Schultz, who for the past five years has been private secretary to John H. Harrison, editor of the Commercial-News. Miss Schultz, in turn, has been succeeded as private secretary by Miss Honore Fox.

Miss Elizabeth I. Toms, secretary to Ogden Reid, editor of the New York Herald Tribune, and Miss Norah K. Thompson, secretary to Arthur Draper, assistant editor, have returned from a vacation spent in the White Mountains. Miss Charlotte Ornstein, secretary to E. G. Rich, city editor, has returned from a vacation at Big Indian, New York.

Miss Ethel W. Everett, a member of the New York Times library staff, and formerly secretary to Carr V. Van Anda, managing editor of the New York Times, has joined the New York Herald Tribune as assistant to Robert McCabe, rotogravure editor.

Mrs. Harry Hines, society editor, Salt Lake City Telegram, is at her desk again following a tour of Europe.

Dorothy Thompson, Berlin correspondent of the New York Evening Post, has written a series of articles for her paper and the Post Syndicate on the new Germany. Miss Thompson has made a thorough research and writes very entertainingly.

INTERTYPE IDEAL NEWS FACE

Give Your Readers the Type They Were "Raised On"

Nearly every book used in public or private schools, especially below the sixth grade, is printed from type that is fundamentally the same in construction as Intertype IDEAL News Face—Modern Roman.

For the square make up of a newspaper column any type of the Modern Roman group is better than any type from the Old Style Roman group or than from the Classic Roman group, etc. The types in the Modern Roman group are STEADY in design.

Psychologists and optometrists have known for years that the steady construction of Modern Roman types were easier on the eyes. So, these have been the types most used for the textbooks in schools.

Intertype IDEAL News Face is basically a Modern Roman letter that has been designed especially for newspapers. The thin lines are stronger than for book printing, but the letters haven't been ruined by making the strokes all the same thickness — thus creating monotony—which is as tiring on the eyes as the confusion of flowing lines in a confined space like a newspaper column.

Many leading newspapers like The New York Times, The Cleveland Plain Dealer, etc., have adopted this type.

Let us show you how to take the matter up with your readers.

LOPS OFF BIG NAME

Binghamton Press and Leader Now Simply the Binghamton Press

Newspaper names, what with mergers and all, have been growing longer and longer, and this week from Binghamton, N. Y., came the welcome news of a paper that has used the scissors to good advantage on an unwieldly cognomen.

The Binghamton (N. Y.) Press and Leader has abridged its official title to the Binghamton Press.

R. E. Bennett, general manager of the paper, commenting on the innovation, stated:

"For many decades newspapers, as a result of mergers, have been lengthening their titles until the records and rate cards are cluttered with unwieldy and cumbersome appellations, fairly pock-marked with hyphens and brackets. The recently born crusade for efficiency seems to have touched almost every form of industrial endeavor except newspaper titles. Publications which spend thousands of dollars for efficiency each year, appear daily with long and cumbersome names which do not serve any practical purpose. A recent edition of a newspaper directory lists hundreds of publications with from three to five names coupled together by hyphens. And the records of advertising agents must perforce list each one of the superfluous titles whenever the name of the newspapers are entered on card or ledger.

"The Binghamton Press Company, publishers of the Binghamton Press and Leader, recognizing that considerable effort can be saved by lopping off superfluous titles, starts the movement for shorter newspaper names this week by dropping part of its own appellation. Hereafter it will be known simply as the Binghamton Press."

TO BECOME A DAILY

The Batesville (Ark.) Record, published by W. M. Shelby, will be published daily, instead of weekly, after Oct. 6.

PHIL PAYNE, "REPORTER ALWAYS," LOST AT SEA

other New York newspaper men, were invited to Mr. Carroll's birthday party at the Earl Carroll theatre. Early in the evening, Mr. Carroll came to the editor and told him of the bathtub scene that he planned to put on in the early morning hours.

"If you do I'll print it," was the prompt reply of Mr. Payne.

He did, telephoning some of the details to the office himself. Subsequently Carroll was convicted of perjury in connection with the investigation of the party and is now in Atlanta federal penitentiary.

In the last half year, with the exception of the Old Glory flight, the Mirror's editor has done little really startling "to make his paper talked about." It was in 1925 that he was most active in this line, then that as the tabloid ringmaster he cracked his whip to make circulation figures jump.

A stunt of that year that made people talk on Broadway was to advertise a "Big Dough Man" contest which he originated. He dressed a fat man up in silk jeans dyed to the semblance of greenbacks and had him driven along Broadway conspicuously cramped in a small dilapidated Ford car. This Falstaff, when halted by traffic, clowned and talked nonsense to the crowd. He was distributing $100 in prizes daily for gags like this "My friend is a big necker from Spooner, Wis."

Another Barnum stunt Mr. Payne originated fooled all the standard newspapers including the New York Times. The idea occurred to him that 90 per cent of the so-called amnesia cases were faked. He was confident he could bamboozle the worthiest doctors in regard to this ailment. He hired a new woman reporter, Alma Sioux Scarberry, furnished her with the latest novel written by Elinor Glyn, told her to forget who she was, be picked up by police, "Wandering aimlessly" and then remember suddenly she was the book heroine, a fictitious member of the English nobility. The Glyn story was then to be run in the Mirror as a serial.

It worked beautifully. Every other New York paper was fooled by the hoax as well as the doctors. The Times printed a picture of the amnesia victim, who, in apparent moments of lucidity in the hospital to which she was taken, quoted at length from Elinor Glyn's book. When finally opposition papers began to sense the stunt, Mr. Payne called in his woman writer, and she told the real story in the Mirror.

It had been Mr. Payne's boyhood intention to become a Roman Catholic priest. He was a devout follower of that faith. Born in San Francisco, Mr. Payne went to St. Michael College, Toronto, Ont., to be educated, and while there made up his mind to be a chemist rather than a clergyman.

His diploma won, he left Canada and went to Perth Amboy, N. J., where he began playing with explosives. When chemistry was his sole ambition, the young Payne had neither counted on the fact that he loved baseball, nor that at 12, he had set type and delivered papers for the Gravenhurst (Ont.) Banner.

Wanting free tickets to the ball game Payne discovered an easy route to the parks began at newspaper offices. He started writing sports, therefore, for the Perth Amboy Chronicle, and his pyrotechnic career as newspaper man was begun.

His next step was to the desk of sporting editor of the Hoboken Jersey Observer. At 21, he had created such a ripple in the Observer's puddle that the opposition began bidding for his services and he became editor of the Union Hill (N. J.) Hudson Dispatch.

During the war, Mr. Payne was declared physically unfit for the regular army and served abroad with the Knights of Columbus. Following the war he worked on the Chicago Herald & Examiner. From the middle west he came to New York on the American, from which paper he jumped to the Daily News, in 1919, when that present tabloid giant was started. He was assistant city editor, city editor, and news editor in quick succession, becoming managing editor in 1922. A little more than two years later found him on the Mirror as managing editor and vice-president.

Those friends of his in the newspaper business, and he had many, being a kind-hearted, generous leader, will remember Payne as he looked in his dusty crowded corner of the dark Mirror office.

There he would sit, in the spotlight of his shaded desk lamp, a young man tingling to his finger tips with interest in his work.

Slightly deaf, he would lean far forward and peer intently into the face of his questioner, one hand cupped to his ear. As he talked in his high quick jerky way, he would push his other hand nervously through his thinning mop of tangled black hair, waving always untamed above a green eye shade. His eyes would be bright; his laugh frequent. Always his mind was active, grasping ideas quickly.

Mr. Payne had never become a cynical "hard-boiled" newspaper man.

CRAFTSMEN ELECT

A. E. Giegengack Heads International Printing Society

A. E. Giegengack, of New York, was elected president of the International Association of Printing House Craftsmen at the eighth annual convention held this week at the Hotel Commodore.

Other officers elected were: First vice-president, V. Winfield Challenger, Philadelphia; second vice-president, Frank Rodell, Los Angeles; treasurer, Harvey Weber, Buffalo; secretary, L. M. Augustine, Baltimore.

GRIT and SMALL TOWN AMERICA

FOR 45 years GRIT has studiously catered to SMALL TOWN AMERICA. In selecting its contents for this clientele, it has developed a unique and distinctive type of family newspaper—a combination of weekly illustrated newspaper, magazine and fiction publication. It is intentionally made up in four distinct and separable sections, so that it may be taken apart and read by different members of a family. Why?

Because GRIT families average 4.63 persons, and GRIT is a home and family newspaper. It is delivered each week right into more than 350,000 homes by GRIT'S own 15,000 agents in more than 12,000 Small Towns and Villages. Here, in these prosperous homes of SMALL TOWN AMERICA, where not only the necessities but most of the luxuries of life are enjoyed, GRIT is read until the succeeding issue of GRIT is received.

In these homes GRIT is more than an informant. Through the passing years it has become a trusted and looked-for friend whose news and editorials instruct, whose fiction and features entertain, and whose magazine and miscellany articles enlighten. Its advertisements, too, are read and relied upon, and their buying suggestions are followed, as can be attested by those advertisers and agencies that have used GRIT'S columns.

BETWEEN the congested large cities and the isolated rural homes lies a large group of peaceful towns and villages of from 100 to 5,000 people, enjoying not only most of the conveniences of cities, but also a friendliness and home pride unknown to them. These towns and villages, comprising SMALL TOWN AMERICA, are the field of 77% of GRIT'S circulation.

A recent survey of GRIT readers made by Emerson B. Knight, Inc., permits us to paint a very vivid figure picture of who GRIT readers are and how they live.

75.49% of the heads of GRIT families earn more than average income
69.49% own their own homes
69.19% of GRIT homes are wired for electricity
44.78% have bath rooms
31.36% have vacuum cleaners
30.71% have radios
55.68% have phonographs
69.02% have automobiles
38.96% have washing machines
And 79.2% have bank accounts

Do these percentage figures change your opinion of SMALL TOWN AMERICA? Did you imagine they possessed half of these luxuries in the small towns and villages of our country?

The complete survey report on SMALL TOWN AMERICA reads almost like a fairy story—yet we can and will gladly substantiate any of these facts and figures.

SMALL TOWN AMERICA can no longer be neglected from a merchandising standpoint. And, in any program aimed at SMALL TOWN AMERICA, GRIT must head the list.

At the extreme right, under the wing of the "Spirit of St. Louis," is Ralph Heinzen, United Press staff correspondent, who was responsible for some newspaper mention of the three figures at the left: Queen Elizabeth of Belgium, Charles A. Lindbergh and King Albert.

Even this was news, for Victor de Franck, U. P. correspondent at Harbin, Manchuria, on a vacation fishing trip on the Gan River in Inner Mongolia, caught 54 salmon, one of which weighed 58 pounds and established a record.

The gentleman at the extreme right, leaning against the ventilator, is Emilio Herrero of the Madrid staff of the United Press, who flew 1200 miles from Seville, Spain, to Cape Juby on the African Gold Coast to interview four Uruguayan trans-Atlantic fliers. They are shown here en route to Las Palmas. The lad with the towel around his head is one of the Moors who rescued the aviators.

In the hinterland of India, G. M. Dyce-Keele, United Press correspondent at Karachi, sometimes has to travel by camel to get the news, and send his stories back by courier.

NEW VIEW ON CRIME NEWS

HAS America been experiencing a "crime wave" or has post-war criminality been in normal proportion, according to increased population? Writing in The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, Ellen C. Potter, Secretary of Welfare of Pennsylvania, finds that for the United States as a whole, and for Pennsylvania in particular, there has been a decrease in crime in proportion to the population of nearly 40 per cent in the period from 1875 to 1926. The actual figure of decrease in the whole country she puts at 37.7 per cent. The actual recorded commitments in Pennsylvania have increased 81.2 per cent while the population of the state has increased 118 per cent.

This authority finds that spectacular crimes against persons in Pennsylvania have increased 48.7 per cent while crimes against property have decreased 12.5 per cent.

This figuring of increased crime, in proportion to increased population, is an interesting new phase of a much-discussed matter, but it is not more of a revelation than that which this authority gives in regard to the moot question of the proportion of crime in the modern newspaper. By an investigation from old files she discovered that the Philadelphia Public Ledger and Philadelphia Inquirer in the year 1876 devoted a half to a third more of their total space to crime news than do those newspapers in this day. Of course they were small papers then, but it is for the proportion of crime news to the total volume of news published that the modern newspaper is being criticized. It is pointed out, also, that the newspaper of today is not content with publishing news of local crime but is concerned with news of spectacular crimes over the whole world. In general, the writer says: "The space devoted to crime news in the standard, reputable newspapers of the country is proportionately less than it was fifty years ago. The modern journalistic technique, combined with more spectacular crimes, committed by much younger persons, gathered more completey from the whole world by the great news agencies, multiplied by the increased density of population of necessity overwhelms the individual citizen with a sense of deluge by a crime wave."

Here, then, is an authoritative denial of one of the commonest charges made against the modern press.

"My newspaper made a blunder in reporting one of the air flights and we were roasted by the opposition," said a publisher, who then asked: "Does that sort of thing really hurt a newspaper?" We believe that the public is tolerant and quick to forget wintentional errors of that sort. What the public will not forgive is stupid inaction.

NEW BASEBALL MAGNATE

PAUL BLOCK joins the small but distinguished group of newspaper publishers who believe that their newspaper's activities for the public service might be enhanced by ownership of the local professional baseball club. It has been an expensive venture for newspaper men in the past, and even today the baseball magnate shoulders as many hazards of business as the newspaper owner of a few years ago bore on his precarious path. Possibly the hazard is one of baseball's attractions for the publisher, as well as the boyish love for the game evinced by Mr. Block. There is much common sense, too, in Mr. Block's theory, stated by Arthur Brisbane, that since baseball club profits are really a newspaper by-product and would drop if newspapers dropped baseball, the newspaper owner who creates baseball profits should share in them as baseball club owners.

Neither newspaper support nor newspaper ownership can wring profits from the flounderings of a team near the foot of the league standing, however, and Mr. Block is just as likely to let his baseball club share heavily in newspaper profits as otherwise. Unless, perhaps, he knows the magic secret by which he can transmute his demonstrated genius for newspaper success into the strategy of field and bench that produces pennants and profits from the diamond.

The end of wild air riding is in sight.

PHILIP PAYNE

ON the highways or in the byways of journalistic experience one rarely meets a man in whom the passion for newspaper adventure and achievement burned so fiercely as it did in the heart and mind of Philip Alan Payne. To understand the tragedy that has befallen the young managing editor of New York Mirror it is necessary to have known him and to have studied his temperament.

Although in his early thirties Phil Payne looked and acted like a man of fifty or more. He suffered from a defect in hearing, walked flat-footedly and with a stoop, had a way of running his fingers through his ragged hair, and talked in staccato, abruptly and with sharp emphasis. A kinder or truer eye never shone in a man's head. Behind this exterior flamed an extraordinary emotionalism. To him life was a gigantic, roaring extravaganza, the dawn of each new day a challenge to find and see and touch some new and glittering element of interest. Phil Payne did not "go out on assignments," he threw himself at them with complete self-abandon. As the apostle of the new tabloid journalism, a trade, by the way, in which he was amazingly capable, his days and nights were passed in ceaseless excitement and it may be truly said of him that he lived more lives than one.

Despite his emotional temperment Phil Payne did not have an unruly mind, in the sense that he was thoughtless or reckless. All of his amazing action was clearly planned. Once he had made up his mind to do a thing, he was stubborn and no one could sway him. Few men know the degree of copper-riveted courage that possessed him. And he loved right and truth and in his personal relationships was a genial, happy, loyal and generous friend and companion.

Phil Payne contributed largely to the huge success of New York Daily News; it reached a million circulation in his regime as editor. The moment he took editorship of New York Mirror that paper began to bristle with action. Payne never published a dirty paper—but he did seek out the most bizarre and exciting subjects and every issue of the Mirror gave evidence of his genius. His work in the Hall-Mills case was extraordinary and in many respects worthy of the acclaim of newspaperdom. For some things EDITOR & PUBLISHER criticised the Mirror, and Phil Payne accepted our views as correct and thanked us for our "help." When the constitutional rights of striking workmen in a surburban city were being trampled on and newspaper men were being treated like outlaws by the subsidized police Phil Payne opened up his columns to the story and with word and picture made that hideous industrial outrage a national public concern. The man rode every trade wind in the sea of news and studied the reading public's tastes and desires as a naturalist studies life under the glass.

Naturally Phil Payne desired to be the first reporter to experience a trans-Atlantic plane flight. Lying in a cramped position on his stomach in a narrow space in Old Glory's body, with explosive gasoline tanks on either side of him, he set out on the adventure with a wad of copy paper and a stubby pencil in his hands. His mind was set to do this thing, foolhardy as calmer minds saw it, but to him merely taking a chance that was necessary to his peculiar peace of mind. Mr. Hearst's commands could not stop him. He kissed his charming young bride good-bye and dashed smilingly into oblivion.

That was Phil Payne, who lived more lives than one.

ADVERTISING MOB SCENES

EVERY advertiser and especially the advertiser of a new wrinkle of an established product some time comes to a fork in the distribution road. Should he seek sales in fierce competition with established articles among people acquainted with his general idea and its applications? Or should he move out of the worn tracks, find new uses and new users, with all of the extra sales and advertising efforts that such a course implies and the chance that his new field will quickly be overrun with cheap competition? The answer is usually in favor of the first course. Take the chance that you will get your share in the general melee. Go where the crowd is. Let the fool seek gold in the desert.

The same line of reasoning seems to apply to national advertisers' use of newspaper space, with results that are not happy for the publisher and not so happy as they might be for the advertiser. Years ago, some shrewd merchants discovered that the time to advertise was when people got their week's pay, usually at the week-end. Pay days are no longer concentrated on Saturday, but the old idea dies hard, and the Friday evening papers of many cities bulge at the margins with advertising, often apologizing for the omission of a great quantity. Editorial material is compressed to the minimum to admit the advertising multitude, certainly not altogether to the newspaper's well-being, and even then all available facilities are taxed beyond normal.

National advertisers have adopted the theory that the day for their copy is when the local merchant, with his presumably better knowledge of the local pocketbook, uses newspaper space en massc. The consumer is beset once a week or twice a week by a bewildering display of refrigerators, motor cars, tires, face-powder, Persian rugs, Japanese goldfish, etc., etc.

The consumer's dollar is spent every day in the week, even on the day before payday, but one would never suspect it from newspaper advertising columns. It is difficult to expect that local merchants will cease to buy space according to tradition, but the national advertiser is bound by no such cords. The present course of much national copy is directly into the heart of an already bad traffic snarl, with the newspaper publishing large and unsightly editions once or twice a week and unprofitably small issues on other days. National advertisers who are seeking the most comfortable road to market might try one of the shadier forks indicated in Mr. Franklin's article on another page of this issue.

Occasionally we see a so-called comic strip which seems to have no meaning or point. The artist simply missed fire that day. It is printed, of course, for the sake of continuity. But is continuity a positive virtue?

A KIND OF TREASON

LORD HEWART, Chief Justice of England, addressing the American Bar Association, said that misrepresentation in news is more dangerous to society "than Communism" and added: "Is it not really a kind of treason against the political sovereign, deliberately to mislead the public, either by active misrepresentation or by calculated suppression?"

The comparison with Communism is a bit vague, but the Chief Justice of England will look far and wide to find a serious-minded journalist who will disagree with his view that misrepresentation in news is a dangerous evil. He will find no American newspaper man who will attempt to defend wholesale lying in public print nor suppression of legitimate news.

For our part we agree that it is a "kind of treason" against the government, particularly when public opinion is the political sovereign. But we believe that positive misrepresentation in news and also negative suppression of news are as reprehensible evils when committed by government officials as by newspaper men. Lord Hewart we dare say has little conception of the ceaseless struggle of newspaper men to get the truth and all of the truth from individuals and public institutions that cannot bear to have the truth told.

FOLKS WORTH KNOWING

DEWITT MACKENZIE, recently appointed chief of the London bureau of the Associated Press, will sail from New York on the S. S. Baltic Sept. 17, to assume his new duties in England. Mr. MacKenzie succeeds Charles Stephenson Smith, promoted to chief of the A. P. foreign service. He has been in this country for about a year, but has been in A. P. foreign service generally since 1916.

DEWITT MACKENZIE

Mr. MacKenzie has been with the Associated Press for 17 years. Prior to joining the staff of the New York office, he had worked for the Syracuse Post-Standard, Schenectady Gazette, and other up-state New York papers.

Shortly after he was sent abroad in 1916, Mr. MacKenzie went to Ireland to cover the "Easter Week Rebellion" of that year, and was under fire and in considerable danger in Dublin.

The summer of that same year he went as correspondent to the British front, and from there journeyed to Egypt. When he arrived at Port Said he was the first correspondent to reach Egypt since the war had started. While there he was the guest of the British High Commissioner, Sir Henry McMahon and interviewed the Sultan Hussein Kamil.

In 1916 and 1917 he toured India, writing on the war situation. From 1917 until the end of the war he was the accredited correspondent with the British armies in France and Belgium, and was also accredited correspondent with the British and Belgium armies of occupation on the Rhine. He was a member of the A. P. special staff, the Paris Peace Conference and was also present at the signing of the Treaty of Versailles. He rejoined the London staff in 1919.

Despite the press of newspaper work, MacKenzie has found time to write. He is author of "The Awakening of India" and the novel, "The Girl in the Mask."

ASSOCIATIONS

ADVERTISING CLUB OF WORCESTER, Mass., has resumed its meetings after the summer vacation period.

Bob Kennedy and Alex Kennedy, both of the Boston (Mass.) Globe, were the first and second winners, respectively, in the Class A competition of the BOSTON NEWSPAPERMEN'S GOLF ASSOCIATION at the Bear Hill Country Club, Wakefield, Mass., Aug. 29. Eighteen members participated. C. F. Marden of the Transcript and R. T. Brady of the Post were the winners of Class B play.

Instructors in reporting and writing will hold their annual meeting at Franklin College, Franklin, Ind., Oct. 21 and 22. Their organization is known as the INDIANA JOURNALISTIC TEACHERS' AND ADVISORS' ASSOCIATION. It will meet at Franklin at the same time as the annual convention of the Indiana High School Press Association.

Members of the LIVINGSTON COUNTY PRESS ASSOCIATION were guests of Walter B. Sanders, editor and publisher of the Nunda (N. Y.) News, at a luncheon in the Mary Jemison Inn, Nunda, on Aug. 22, when the annual meeting of the association took place. Oscar Woodruff of Dansville, who retired recently as editor of the Dansville Express, and who is the oldest newspaper man in Livingston county, was guest of honor. Samuel T. Jennings, editor of the Livingston Republican, was elected president and George Haywood of Nunda, secretary.

Annual convention of the ADVERTISING SPECIALTY ASSOCIATION will be held in Chicago Sept. 19-22. A program of round-table discussions and talks on every phase of advertising specialties has been arranged for the convention, which will be held in the Hotel Sherman.

Representatives from community newspapers of every section of Cook county met at the PRESS CLUB OF CHICAGO Saturday, Sept. 3, to consider the question of a permanent organization. A committee of four, with Manuel Goldberger editor of the North West Ledger, Chicago, as chairman, was chosen to draw up a plan for such an organization. Henry W. Lee, editor of the Calumet Record and president of the Press Club, presided.

Following their business sessions at Wenatchee Sept. 15 and 16, members of the WASHINGTON PRESS ASSOCIATION will take a trip Sept. 17 up the Columbia and Okanogan rivers to Chelan where they will be entertained by the people of Chelan and the Washington Water Power Company. In the afternoon they will continue their trip up the Columbia river to the Okanogan valley and in the evening be the guests of O. H. Woody, editor of the Okanogan Independent at his inn, the Cariboo Inn.

Revision of its Constitution of the Advertising Club of St. Louis to conform to that of the International Advertising Association has been recently effected. Present officers of the club are: President, Harry T. Bussman; first vice-president, Douglas V. Martin, Jr.; second vice-president, William J. Johnson; third vice-president, J. L. Isaacs; secretary, Herbert J. Echle; treasurer, Frank Fuchs.

Toledo Blade Overcame Summer Slump in Street Sales—Carolinas Circulation Managers Association to Meet—Airplane Delivery as a Stunt

THE summer slump in street sales was overcome this year by the Toledo (O.) Blade by means of a novel contest among the street boys of the paper.

Early in the summer Raphael Kest, street sales manager, announced an outing and boat ride for the street boys toward the close of the season, giving them about two months' notice. He also said that everything given on the outing was to be earned by the boys.

A system of prize awards was announced, on the ticket plan. Each boy who sold his complete allotment of papers was given a ticket. Each increase of 10 was rewarded with another ticket.

In addition to prizes awarded on the ticket plan, each boy was required to have a given number of tickets in order to be admitted to the races and other events on the outing, for each of which merchandise prizes were awarded.

One of the results of the ticket system, Mr. Kest says, was to keep out the floaters who usually flock to such events. It was a purely Blade outing, for which more than 15,000 tickets were given to the 300 Blade boys who attended.

The outing, held last week, was at Put-in Bay, where the boys were taken on a lake steamer which had been chartered for the day by the Blade. There was a full program of events, including foot races, swimming races, boxing, watermelon eating contest and pie eating contest.

Will X. Coley, circulation manager of the Raleigh News and Observer and president of the Carolinas Circulation Managers' Association, has sent out notices that the group's eighth annual convention will be held at Asheville, N. C., Oct. 17-18. An invitation has also been extended to the circulation managers of the daily papers in Tennessee to meet with the Carolinas association.

Members of the program committee, preparing for the meeting are: A. F. Ballentine, Greenville (S. C.) News, chairman; J. M. Blalock, Spartanburg (S. C.) Herald-Journal; and A. F. Carrere, New Bern (N. C.) Sun-Journal.

Planning entertainment are J. R. Marks, Asheville Citizen; R. B. Corn, Asheville Times; and Miss C. McCaskill, Fayetteville (N. C.) Observer.

Those planning to stunt a bit with airplane delivery may profit from the experience of Edwin B. Teller, circulation manager of the Casper (Wyo.) Tribune-Herald.

Teller recently flew with a local pilot delivering copies of his morning paper to nearby towns.

"These papers were delivered by parachute at about 3,000 feet above each town with bundles ranging from 35 to 75 papers each. The Morning Herald came off the press at 4.30 A. M. and were delivered at Greybull, Wyo., 220 miles distant at 7.40."

Mr. Teller said he would gladly furnish circulation managers with measurements of the parachutes and other details, if they cared to write him.

Sixty carriers of the Brooklyn Times took in the sights at Niagara Falls recently as guests of the newspaper.

Wanda Hawley, screen star, and a score of society girls of Buffalo, N. Y., sold copies of the Buffalo Evening News on the streets the night of Aug. 20 to aid the Buffalo Newsboys' Benevolent Association which is raising a fund for a newsboy who has been sick for a year.

The New York World this week entertained 46 newsboys from Springfield, Mass. James Tucculo of Springfield was in charge. Harwood Sprong, of the World, acted as guide in trips about town.

The newsboys and carriers of the Washington (Pa.) Observer and Reporter were guests of the management of the two papers at the Washington County fair on Aug. 31. W. P. Wilson, circulation manager and Campbell March, his assistant, were in charge of the arrangements.

Walter Beaudoin, county circulation manager, Worcester (Mass.) Evening Post, has resigned to enter business in California.

The Chicago Tribune has awarded seven $100 prizes for the best late gardens entered in the paper's home flower garden contest, and 63 smaller prizes. Four of the first-prize winners were also awarded the $100 first prizes in the early gardens competition for the best gardens in their districts.

WHAT'S WHAT IN THE FEATURE FIELD

NEA Starts Fall Drive with List of New Features—King Features Active —Ledger Offering "The Homemaker" by Nancy Carey— Airplane Feature from Graphic

NEA SERVICE, INC., New York and Cleveland, announced its new listing of fall features this week. Included were: "Bridge Me Another" by W. W. Wentworth, a question and answer piece based on bridge; "Weekly Review of Books for Children," by Mary Graham Bonner, herself a writer of children's books; a weekly stage column by Frank Lea Short, president of the American Theatre Association; "Letter Golf," and 16 stories, by Milton Bronner, on German war heroes of land and sky.

Graphic Syndicate, New York, of which Emile Gauvreau is editor, has built up a new aviation contest feature around a series on "How to Fly" articles by Lt. Walter Hinton, pilot of the NC-4 on the first successful trans-Atlantic flight.

One of the prizes to be given in a contest based on Hinton's articles will be an Alexander Eaglerock airplane with flight instruction courses.

From the King Features Syndicate, Inc., this week comes news of the following fall features: a new educational pictorial strip, "The Story of Music" by Mme. Schumann-Heink, with art by Paul Pim; 12 new "Classics In Slang" by H. C. Witwer, illustrated by Tony Sarg; and the life story of James W. Coffroth, described as "one of the sporting world's most colorful characters."

Ledger Syndicate, Philadelphia, is sending out promotion on the "The Homemaker," by Nancy Carey. It is described as an effort "to simplify rather than complicate housekeeping."

Alfred Graham Jackson has been appointed editor of International Illustrated News with offices in New York.

A. A. Hoopingarner, publisher of the Dover (O.) Reporter, is now representing King Features Syndicate in the Ohio sales field, having resigned from the American Press.

SERVICE PLUS—

THE GEORGIAN AMERICAN
DAILY SUNDAY
ATLANTA GEORGIA

July 29, 1927

Home Economics Service Corp.,
247 Park Ave.,
New York City, N. Y.

Gentlemen:-

Please accept our heartfelt thanks for your cooperation in the opening of the Georgian's "Health Kitchen" July 18th. The occasion was a signal success to which your Mrs. Crabtree, because of her charm and splendid addresses to the fine Atlanta women, contributed greatly.

It is fitting in this connection to advise you also that the Cooking School directed by you for The Georgian February 22, 23, 24 and 25 was a distinct accomplishment in advertising results. Our lineage, as I understand it, was the highest for all similar projects held this year, namely 81,682 lines.

These schools have aroused tremendous interest among the women of this city. Much of the enthusiasm now manifested in our new Health Kitchen is the inevitable result of the school. It is conservately estimated that 8,000 women attended the school in February and the present attendance in the Georgian's Health Kitchen indicates that the Goergian's auditorium, now seating 250, will be inadequate ere long to accommodate the daily attendance.

The outlook for our 1928 Cooking School as indicated by the request for space assures us of again breaking all records. In view of the foregoing it seems to me that your organization is to be congratulated for the extraordinary service you are rendering through your newspaper associates to women wherever you operate.

Again thanking you for your very gracious cooperation and with best wishes for your continued success, I am

Yours very truly,

R. M. Reynolds

Director of Advertising.

W. H. PORTERFIELD, PACIFIC COAST VETERAN, DIES IN SAN DIEGO

Part Owner of San Diego Sun Had Long Career with Scripps-McRae Newspapers—Published Fresno, Los Angeles and San Francisco Dailies

WILLIAM H. PORTERFIELD, 55, part owner and contributing editor of the San Diego (Cal.) Sun, died Sept. 2 after a short illness following an operation for inflammation and appendicitis. Funeral was held Sept. 3.

W. H. PORTERFIELD

Among the pall bearers were Col. Milton A. McRae, Paul C. Edwards, Walter S. Dayton, editor and business manager of the Sun, Judge W. A. Sloane, formerly of the California Supreme Court, and other friends.

Members of Mr. Porterfield's immediate family and San Diego relatives were at the bedside at his death. A month ago he was stricken with an acute intestinal disturbance, recurrence of a trouble he had experienced before. Physicians who examined him decided an operation was imperative and when he had sufficiently recovered from the attack, he submitted himself to the ordeal. Apparently the operation was successful as he rallied well immediately afterwards. Later his condition grew less favorable and from then on became progressively worse.

William Hempstead Porterfield was born in Vinton, Ia., April 26, 1872, the son of W. S. and Mary J. (Davis) Porterfield. He spent most of his boyhood in South Dakota. His father died when he was 5 years old. With his mother and sister, Mrs. M. B. Fanton, he came to San Diego, Jan. 10, 1891, and almost immediately he got a job as cub reporter and subscription solicitor for the Sun. His wages were $5 per week as cub reporter, with an additional $2 for carrying a paper route. The Sun then had five carriers and most of the delivering was done on horseback.

One year later the late E. W. Scripps bought the Sun and consolidated it with the old San Diegan. In 1901 Mr. Porterfield bought a half-interest in the Sun, and retained it until last year when he sold some of his holdings to local associates in the management, reducing his own share of the property to 40 per cent, which he held at the time of his death.

In 1903 he went east for the Pacific Coast group of Scripps-McRae papers as advertising manager in the Eastern field. He returned to California in October, 1904, and founded the Sacramento Star, becoming the president of its publishing company. In 1906 he took over the Fresno Tribune as publisher under Scripps-McRae control, following with the Los Angeles Record in 1909 and the San Francisco News in 1910.

From 1909 until 1913 he was editor-in-chief of the California group of Scripps-McRae papers. In 1913 he resigned and took an extensive European trip. His story of the trip was syndicated and published in many American newspapers.

He returned to San Diego in 1915 and became publisher of the Sun, with Walter S. Dayton as business manager and George H. Thomas as editor. He remained publisher until 1917. Later he went to Washington, D. C., as special writer for the Scripps-McRae papers. He remained in Washington two years and then returned to San Diego. Since that time he has written the "Notions" daily column for the Sun.

Mr. Porterfield is survived by his widow, Lotte Buck Porterfield, his daughter, Florence, two sisters, Margaret B. Fanton and Mrs. George Bidwell, a nephew, Roland Fanton, and a niece, Mrs. Byron Gilchrist, all of San Diego.

He was a stockholder in the San Diego Sun, the San Francisco News, the Southlands Corporation and numerous other local enterprises. In 1925 he founded the Ventura County Star, with Roy D. Pinkerton as editor and part owner.

Mr. Porterfield assisted Milton A. McRae in the preparation of his book, "My Forty Years In Journalism."

PROMINENT MONTREAL EDITOR DIES

Samuel L. Kydd Served Gazette More Than Half a Century—Rose from Compositor to Editorial Chief

Samuel Leys Kydd, for more than half a century with the staff of the Montreal Gazette died at his home Tuesday morning in his 75th year. Illness forced Mr. Kydd to relinquish the editorial chair of the Gazette nine months ago and since that time he has been in failing health.

He is survived by his wife, three sons and a daughter—David of Lumberton, B. C., George of Port Colborne, Thomas of the Gazette staff and Miss Helen who is living at home.

Following a service conducted at the house at 2:30 Thursday afternoon by the Rev. Malcolm Campbell, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church the funeral cortege proceeded to Mount Royal Cemetery.

The late Mr. Kydd was respected and loved by all Montreal newspapermen whose work brought them in touch with his genial personality. His wide and exact knowledge, not only of the technicalities of journalism and printing, but of public affairs and national policies, won him universal admiration in his profession. Born in Scotland Mr. Kydd was trained as a printer in Lindsay, Ont., at one time working as a fellow printer with the late Sir Sam Hughes. In March, 1874, he became a compositor with the Gazette. In 1885 he became assistant editor and ten years later he succeeded R. S. White now M.P. for Mount Royal as chief editor. A highly prized tribute was paid him in 1906 when the members of the Press Gallery at Ottawa elected him their president.

In March, 1924, the staff of the Gazette observed his jubilee of service by presenting him with a grandfather clock. When Mr. Kydd withdrew from active journalism in December of last year he brought to a conclusion 53 years of devoted and able work for a single paper. During his career with the Gazette he rose from compositor to editor in 21 years.

WILLIAM B. McCORMICK

William B. McCormick, 43, a Chicago newspaperman for 29 years, 20 of which were spent on the Hearst newspapers, died Sept. 4 at his home, following a three-day illness of pneumonia. For the past ten years Mr. McCormick was a legislative reporter for the Chicago Herald and Examiner in Springfield. He began his newspaper career on the City News Bureau when he was 14 years old.

G. B. S. ON PUNCTUATION

Why use quotation marks? George Bernard Shaw, noted British author, doesn't use them in editions of his printed plays. This week a woman critic asked him why. Because, the writer informed her, "you will see, if you open the nearest Bible, how much better a book looks without apostrophes than with them."

Obituary

GEORGE FEATHERSTONE, 70, died Aug. 27, at Paris, Ont. He was for 30 years owner and editor of the Paris Star Transcript.

SAMUEL L. MAY, Evansville (Ind.) banker who died last week from injuries suffered in an automobile accident, was a director of the Evansville Journal up to 1923 when the paper was sold to the Courier. Included in the bequests of his will, which totalled more than $1,500,000, was a $100,000 legacy to Mrs. Bessie Lauenstein, widow of Frederick Lauenstein, former owner and publisher of the Evansville Democrat, which was suspended during the war.

MURRAY C. ABBOTT, stereotype operator of the Rochester Herald and the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle for more than 45 years, died recently in his home in Rochester after a brief illness.

JOSEPHINE VANDERGRIFF RIGBY, 32, a news writer of Akron, O., died at her home in that city this week. She formerly wrote for N. E. A. Service, Inc., but lately had been with the Akron Beacon Journal.

THOMAS J. FOSTER, 56, editor of the Ozark Fruit Grower, Monett, Mo., for many years, died at his home near Washburn, Mo., Aug. 29.

Thomson, Western Electric Company.

FIGHTING BILLBOARD CURB

Outdoor Agency President Testifies in Injunction Action

Testimony that regulations of the Massachusetts Department of Public Works have seriously interfered with the business of his company was given by Kerwin H. Fulton, president of the General Outdoor Advertising Company, at a resumption of hearings before Frank H. Stewart, master, last week at the State house, Boston, following injunction proceedings.

Fulton declared that 50 national advertisers are prevented from advertising in Massachusetts because of the lack of sites due to the department's regulations. Questioned as to the claim that billboards have been a contributing cause of automobile accidents, Fulton said he never had investigated them while viewing sites.

Walter R. Skiff, an engineer, testifying in behalf of the billboard interests, told of billboards owned by the General Outdoor Advertising Company in Springfield, and said that in his opinion they were not harmful to the public interest.

TREASURE HUNT GOOD PROMOTION FOR DAILY

3,000 Participated in Seattle Times Stunt—Prizes Were Merchandise Certificates

Co-operating with the Shell Oil company, whose gasoline stations were trimmed with signs of piracy, and where fair buccaneers were on duty, the Seattle (Wash.) Times staged a treasure hunt in West Seattle, Sunday, Aug. 28, in which about 3000 citizens, armed with spades and shovels, dug up a section of the city to unearth $6,000 worth of variegated merchandise which the newspaper had induced business men to contribute, and which it had secreted.

A comprehensive listof prizes ranging from soda water to motor-boat certificates, from shoe repair servicing, laundry work, to automobile allowances were unearthed in this pirate hunt, which for days was kept before the eyes of the people by elaborate publicity which gave full credit to those contributing towards the success of this advertising stunt.

A carnival spirit prevailed through the more than four hours of constant digging. An orchestra, composed of young women, dressed in costumes of Captain Kidd, played jazz to enhearten the perspiring diggers, who threw earth about in rhythmic motions. There was one digger for every two feet of area.

Mrs. Lambert Caspers won the capital prize with her shovel against husky muscular men. She pecked at the soil occasionally and struck a small round can with a printed number. At the booth she presented the numbered container and was told she had won the chief award of the day, two lots and complete building material for a $4,000 bungalow.

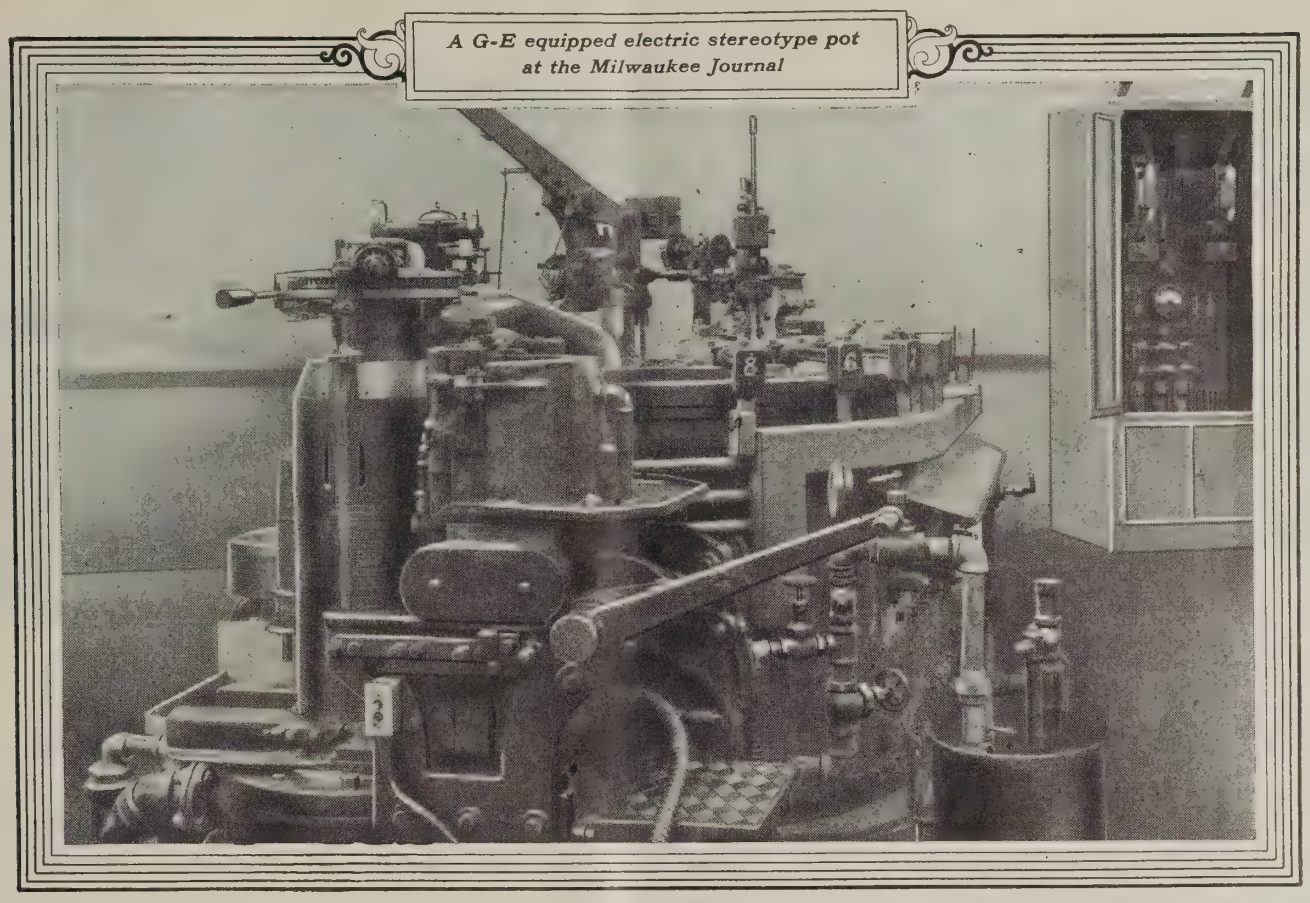
FUND SAVES ORCHESTRA

Chicago News Raises $30,000 in Nine-Day Campaign

The fund sponsored by the Chicago Daily News to insure a 1927-28 season of Chicago Symphony orchestra programs reached the goal of $30,000 and the continuance of the symphony for at least another season is assured. Because of a deadlock between the Orchestra association and the Chicago Federation of Musicians over the salaries of the players, it was announced July 14 that the orchestra stood disbanded. When efforts to solve the problem proved fruitless, it was decided to raise a fund independently to insure increased pay for the orchestra musicians. The fund was completed nine days after it was announced.

The Daily News started things off with a gift of $5,000 and Walter A. Strong, publisher of the paper, donated $500.

ATTEND ARMOUR RITES



Several newspaper editors and publishers were among the honorary pallbearers at the funeral, Aug. 30, of J. Ogden Armour, Chicago packer, who died in London after a long illness. Included in the list of pallbearers were William Randolph Hearst, Arthur Brisbane, K. L. Ames, Jr., publisher of the Chicago Journal of Commerce, and John H. Harrison, editor of the Danville (Ill.) Commercial News and president of the Inland Daily Press Association.

A G-E equipped electric stereotype pot at the Milwaukee Journal

What's going on upstairs?

That's what the pressmen said when the beautiful new home of the Milwaukee Journal started operation. Plate after plate coming down from the stereotype room slipped on to the presses with astonishing ease. The uniformity of the plates reduced make-ready to the minimum.

The Milwaukee Journal left no stone unturned to make its new plant a model in the industry. The stereotype room was placed directly in the line of production next to the composing room, and three G-E equipped electrically heated stereotype pots were installed.

The room is cool, clean, and comfortable. Working conditions are so ideal that the output of the operators in the adjoining composing room has been increased. The pots require practically no attention —the precise automatic control insures fastest rate of heating without overheating. The waste in metal has been practically eliminated—and that means large savings in the stereotype room.

Be the first in your community to put electric heat into your stereotype pots. Your nearest G-E office will gladly help you study the problem—with no obligation.

Although electric heat will not supplant all other forms of heat for industrial purposes, there are processes in every industry where it is the ideal heat—the most economical heat—the heat that ultimately will be used.

CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING

A Contest Among Classified Salesmen That Worked for the New York American—It's One Way of Making 500 Orders—Told by Charles Horn, New York American

A SHORT while ago the New York American's classified department set itself to work to gain 500 new contract orders in a month's time. It succeeded and, in the success, is a classified contest story told this week at the request of EDITOR & PUBLISHER by Charles Horn, classified advertising manager of the American.

C. W. HORN

"There is a certain element in human nature, I have noticed, especially in dealing with sales people, that when they promise themselves to do something, they will not rest until it is accomplished, regardless of difficulties. And that was the basic secret of our successful contest," Mr. Horn declared.

"When we set out to sell 500 orders we divided the telephone soliciting department into two teams and the sales department into two teams. Each team had a captain selected by the group.

"A team prize for each of the winning teams in the two divisions was offered, as well as ten individual prizes for the high scorers in the entire department. As an additional aid to team competition we offered a captain's prize to each of the winning captains in the two divisions.

"The scoring of the contest was on a point basis. Inasmuch as we were selling orders to run all the way from one month to a year we used the following scoring plan:

"A one month order counted as 1 point, two months, two points, and on up to eleven.

"A yearly order counted 15 points.

"Any order was considered new business that was not in the paper on contract order one week prior to the start of the contest.

"The contest was originally planned for one month—that is, we set out to increase our orders to the 500 mark in a month's time.

"The contest started off well enough. Offering spurt prizes (special prizes for the teams and individuals that brought in the most orders the first week) helped to accomplish this. But by the end of the second week the contest started to drag and all customary efforts to keep up interest in the contest failed to work.

"Feeling that there must be some plan whereby we could get the department to continue the excellent effort of the first week, I hit on the novel plan of starting a contest within a contest. In other words, we did not want to dump the first contest with all the excellent work that had been done, and yet we realized that we had to make a decided departure in order to get revived interest.

"This is how we did it:

"First, we figured out how many additional orders we had to obtain. This total was 343. We then estimated that by dividing the people in the department in such a way as to get a certain number of orders from each, our quota would be reached, as follows: If five people would sell 20 orders in the remaining two weeks, five would sell fifteen, seven, ten, six, eight, five, four, fifteen, two, we could reach the mark set.

"But instead of picking out certain individuals and assigning these quotas to them, we called a department meeting and put them on their honor, so to speak, to sell as many orders as they in their own minds thought they could sell! By this plan, as above mentioned, we would have six groups, each member of each group promising to sell the number of orders necessary to be included with the group.

"We used names for these groups, which while nothing remarkable in themselves, stimulated a lot of fun, and represented high and low degrees of salesmanship. The first group we called The Wizards, the second, The Supers, the third, The Masters, the fourth, The Go-Getters, the fifth, The Hustlers, and the sixth, The Pluggers, graded in the order named.

"For each group we gave first and second prizes, and every one else that made their quota got a prize of lesser value, according to their group classification.

"We graded the prizes in accordance with the class. For example, The Wizards got more than The Supers because they had more orders to sell; The Supers got more than The Masters, and so on down to The Pluggers class, as follows:

"The Wizards group was composed of five people who were to sell twenty orders each in two weeks; The Supers (five of them) were to sell fifteen orders each; The Masters were seven people who were to sell ten orders each; The Go-Getters group of six was to sell eight each; The Hustlers group of five was to sell four each, and The Pluggers group of fifteen was to sell two each.

"We titled this so-called contest-within-a-contest, Conscience Fund for Conscience Fun. The big feature in the contest was that everybody classified themselves, as far as production and group classification were concerned.

"In getting the plan started we used the old Liberty Loan stunt of announcing that we needed five people to sell twenty orders, five people to sell fifteen orders, seven people to sell ten orders and so on, and that before the meeting was over we wanted everybody in the department to classify themselves and promise that they could obtain that many orders. We had a little difficulty getting The Wizards together. The Supers were less difficult, but by that time everybody had got the spirit of the plan. By the time we had finished the meeting everyone in the department had promised to get a certain numbered of orders within the next two weeks—the total representing the 500 originally planned for."

FIGHTS BOND ISSUE

Publisher Asks Injunction to Prevent Building of New Courthouse

(By Telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Sept. 6.—Suit to enjoin the Howard county commissioners from selling bonds in the amount of $500,000 for erection of a new county courthouse was filed in Howard circuit court at Kokomo, Ind., today by J. A. Kautz, publisher of the Kokomo Tribune, who has been opposing the building of a new courthouse. The publisher contends that the appropriation of $650,000 made by the county council last spring is illegal because it was passed at a special session of the council. Unless an emergency exists, it is illegal to appropriate money at a special meeting.

The state board of tax commissioners, after a hearing held this summer, approved the appropriation on the condition that it be reduced to $500,000.

more than a quarter of a million facts and sets of figures in a standardized form revealing the marketing possibilities, trading conditions and resources of all kinds of more than 1,400 cities and towns in the United States and Canada.

This great reference book is universally recognized as the authoritative source of all needed information in determining where national advertising appropriations shall be made. As such it is used throughout the year by all the leading Agencies and most important General Advertisers.

Only those cities and towns are surveyed in which daily newspapers are published.

Naturally, Market Surveying and Space Buying go hand in hand. And when the data for YOUR city are looked up, the advertiser will have his attention instantaneously drawn to the merits of your paper in covering the market IF you have a message for him about your paper in close proximity to the survey of your city.

If you take time by the forelock, and make your reservations NOW, you will be assured of a strategic position in the 1928 Market Guide that will stand you in mighty good stead as you build up your Linage all through the year 1928.

Forms close in a little over a month.
Shall we tell you more about it?

Henry L. Doherty & Co. write us under date of August 18, 1927, that they find the Market Guide so valuable that they always have it BOUND IN BOOK FORM. And many other subscriber-users do the same thing.

BUSINESS OFFICE RULES MODERN PRESS LORD HEWART TELLS BAR MEMBERS

English Jurist Reiterates His Attack on Present-Day Journalism—Sees No Legal Difference Between Newspapers and Tinned Meats

SPEAKING before the American Bar Association at its annual convention last week in Buffalo, Lord Hewart, Lord Chief Justice of Great Britain, renewed his attack on the press, begun in a previous address before Canadian attorneys. As Lord Hewart began his address Judge William Howard Taft referred to the visiting jurist as a "reporter in the gallery of parliament, where doubtless, like Samuel Johnson in his reports, he was able to improve the style and English of the debates."

In that portion of his address relating to the press Lord Hewart said:

"The other matter to which I should like very briefly to refer is a certain change which seems to have taken place in the character and the aims of much of the newspaper press. It goes without saying that if self-government is to be a real and a living thing, the citizens who share the responsibility of governing, that is to say all the citizens, ought at least to have access to information upon public affairs which is both accurate and adequate.

"One of the instruments for that purpose is, or at any rate ought to be, the newspaper press. You can not expect the right verdict from the jury if the evidence is not fairly and squarely laid before it.

"To put the matter the other way round: Is it not really a kind of treason against the political sovereign deliberately to mislead the public either by active misrepresentation or by calculated suppression? Thirty years ago and more there were already signs in many newspaper offices of a contest for supremacy between what may be called the editorial department on one side and the business, which is to a great extent the advertising department, on the other side.

"During the interval the contest seems to have been decided and, in an enormous number of cases decided in favor of the business department. It was an expert in the business department who said not long ago that the real power of the press is the power of suppression.

"Side by side with this it is impossible not to observe another development—I mean the systematic and increasing concentration of the control of a great number of newspapers under one and the same hand. A multi-millionaire, it would seem, preses a button in his office, or his smoking room, or his bedroom, and straightway the nominal heads of a whole group of newspapers stand at attention, and within a few hours each one of these newspapers, purporting in every case to represent an authentic and individual opinion, asserts or denies, attacks or defends, displays or suppresses, magnifies or disparages, in accordance with the will or the whim of the invisible dictator.

"Well, there is no law at present to prevent newspapers from being treated as mere commercial commodities, as if they were so much soap or oil or tinned meat. But what of the dignity of the press and the claims of the public? And can newspapers be heard to say that these things really do not matter if nobody any longer is ready to accept a newspaper's statements or is willing to pay attention to its opinions? Here, too, there is need, is there not, for increasing vigilance? And if newspapers are indeed to be treated as mere articles of trade, if their function is to be simply to increase and to inflame the already deplorable power of mere money in public affairs, is there any reason whatsoever why, in any respect whatsoever, the law should exhibit any special tenderness towards them?"

BALTIMORE SUN NAMES PROMOTION CHIEF

Edwin A. Fitzpatrick to Direct New Department—P. J. Banker Succeeds Him as Assistant M.E.

A new position, that of promotion manager for the A. S. Abell Company, publishers of the Baltimore Sun and Evening Sun, has been created for Edwin A. Fitzpatrick, who has been the assistant managing editor of the Evening Sun for four years and who has been associated with the paper since it began publication April 18, 1910.

He has been succeeded as assistant managing editor by Paul J. Banker, who came from Middletown, O., to join the Sun. He was the managing editor of the News-Signal there, had executive newspaper experience in New York City and had important duties with the press section of the American Expeditionary Forces in France during the war.

The promotion department will be organized on new lines and will be one of the most important departments of the paper.

Mr. Fitzpatrick has risen from the position of district police reporter. He started in that capacity on the Baltimore World, which ceased publication before the Evening Sun began and which was a training school for many Baltimore newspaper men now holding responsible positions in various parts of the country. He joined the Evening Sun when it was started and after about a year, he was made make-up man. From this position he was transferred to a similar position on the morning paper, where the title was night editor. He was assistant editor of the Sunday Sun, was a copy-reader, head of the telegraph desk and head of the desk of the Evening Sun. About ten years ago he was made city editor of the evening paper. After serving in that capacity for six years, he was made assistant managing editor.

For several years he has had charge of many of the features having to do with promotion. He is a native of Baltimore.

Mr. Fitzpatrick's and Mr. Banker's appointments became effective Sept. 1.

Emmett P. Kavanaugh, for five years a reporter on the Evening Sun, has been made assistant circulation manager of that paper under the direction of Mr. Fitzpatrick.

ENTERS DAILY FIELD

Effective Sept. 1 the Wilson (Okla.) Weekly Post was made a daily. It is a morning paper with Pete Ray Ogdon as editor.

Again the South scores

Federal Tax Payments made by the South—increase in 1927 against a decrease in the rest of the Country- -

Is the South's progress mythical?
Are the South's industries a flash in the pan?
Does the South depend on any single crop?

If these questions where answered in the affirmative the South's Federal Tax payments would not show constant increase against the decrease in the rest of the country. From the southern states alone the Federal Government collected during the fiscal year 1927, over 738 million dollars of which 340 million was from income tax. There was an increase compared with 1926 of nearly 52 million dollars in total Federal Tax receipts, 45 million dollars of which was from income tax collections in the South.

Of striking significance is the fact that while the South paid only 52 million dollars more into the Federal Treasury in total tax in 1927 than in 1926, Federal tax collections in the rest of the country outside of the South during that period was approximately 22 million dollars less.

The state of North Carolina paid more taxes than the combined total of all the New England states, and also more than the combined total of the Pacific coast states. Virginia, Florida and Georgia paid more taxes than some of the largest eastern and middle western states.

We can go on making such comparisons to almost endless extent which would show a remarkable standing for the South in the payment of taxes as compared with what many other states paid. But what we want to prove by these statements is that the South is RICH. It is growing in tremendous buying power and unquestionably is today the outstanding market for the national advertiser.

If your product is not well represented in the South, ask these newspapers listed below to help you.

MOVING DAY FOR MANY CAPITAL BUREAUS

Twelfth Floor of New National Press Club Building Rapidly Being Occupied by Washington Correspondents

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7.—The National Press Building is humming with activity as Washington news bureaus and newspaper correspondents are beginning to settle in its spacious, beautifully finished offices.

The twelfth floor, directly under the elaborate quarters on the upper floors which are being prepared for the new home of the National Press Club, is filling rapidly with news men.

There the Baltimore Sun bureau and the Philadelphia Public Ledger-New York Evening Post bureau were among the first to establish themselves. The New York Herald Tribune bureau will join them shortly.

Bascom N. Timmons, Washington correspondent for the New York Telegraph; Paul Wooton, Washington representative of the McGraw-Hill publications; Russell Kent, Washington correspondent for a "string" of Southern newspapers; William G. Gavin and Robert B. Choate, Washington correspondents, respectively, for the Boston Traveler and Boston Herald, are among those whose shingles have already been hung out upon the twelfth floor, which promises to become the "Newspaper Row" of the structure.

The Washington office of EDITOR & PUBLISHER is being opened upon the twelfth floor. There also will be located before the end of the month the Washington bureaus of the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin, the Philadelphia Inquirer, and the Harrisburg (Pa.) Patriot-News.

The opening of the immense Fox Theatre on the F street side of the new building on Sept. 20, with "Roxie" in charge, will be preceded by a private showing the preceding night for the membership of the National Press Club. President and Mrs. Coolidge are among the distinguished guests who are expected to attend.

This study of 148,000 agate lines national advertising placed by 227 nation advertisers in one month in one newspap reveals many interesting points.

Only 19 pieces of national copy a peared on Saturdays in this sizable da newspaper. The total Saturday nation linage was only 1,403 lines or less th 1 per cent of the month's total. Do this not indicate a remarkably good o portunity for gaining the public's atte tion.

The newspaper released 54 pieces national copy on Sunday, 58 on Monda 70 on Tuesday, 73 on Wednesday, 66 Thursday and 51 on Friday. The fo advertisers used four on Sunday, 10 Monday 17 on Tuesday, 12 on Wednesda 14 on Thursday and 20 on Friday. Su day and Tuesday were the heavy days radio. The advertisers of toilet goods a proprietaries released copy as follow Sunday 33 pieces; Monday, 33; Tuesda 37; Wednesday, 51; Thursday, 40; F day, 25; Saturday, 4.

Monday and Tuesday were the big da in number of pieces of cigaret and t bacco copy. Except for food and toi goods advertising, national users of spa showed a disposition to not run too ma insertions on Friday, which they kno to be a heavy local day.

One surprise which developed from th analysis was that, next to Saturday a Friday, Wednesday had the lightest lina of the week. While in the number pieces of copy published, it ranked hig most of them were small and the to linage was less, only 16,691 lines for t month. For some reason the tobacco a vertisers appeared to "go easy" on th mid-day of the week. The food adve tisers preferred Tuesday and Thursda The toilet goods advertisers also did n order their largest space on Wednesday

Only a few advertisers varied the schedule as to days of the week. Mo of them picked certain definite days a released copy on them religiously we after week.

Actually, Sunday proved to be the pe day of the week in national linage wi a total of 33,566, swelled by 6,272 cigarets and tobacco, 3,754 in food, 4,3 on radio and 13,697 on toilet goods a medicines. Tuesday came second with total of 32,140 lines. Food occupi 6,554 and tobacco 8,820 lines.

Thursday emerged third with 28,0 lines, of which 9,408 were on food. Mo day stood fourth in volume with 19,9 Wednesday was fifth, Friday sixth, a Saturday occupied the cellar position. would appear that some manufacture can get the jump on their competitors using their big space on Wednesday.

With fall and winter advertising sch dules about to break, now is a favorab opportunity to overhaul every detail co nected with them, among which the sele tion of the days of the week deserv detailed consideration. Keen analysi rather than blind following of traditio will prove helpful.

A TIP FOR AD CENSORS

Medical Council Informs Against Worthless Proprietaries

Those newspaper advertising managers wishing to keep their columns free from fraudulent and misleading proprietary advertisements may obtain information and assistance by applying to the Council on Pharmacy and Chemistry of the American Medical Association.

Functions of this council are described in a recent article in the New York Medical Week, official organ of the Medical Society of the County of New York. The article describes the methods for distinguishing between "the meritorious and the worthless, the good and the down-right harmful, in this flood of medicinal products, all of which proclaim themselves sure, safe and effective remedies for the various conditions they purport to treat." The council has a listing of "New and Non-Official Remedies." The article continues:

"Most medical journals of standing refuse to accept the advertisements of any product that is not included in 'New and Non-Official Remedies'. . . . The impetus this gives to reliable high grade medicaments is self-evident.

"There is no injustice worked on any deserving article by the rulings of the Council. All products submitted are analyzed and rejected ones are given an opportunity to conform to requirements.

EYESTRAIN ENDS . . .

The British delegation of trade-union representatives, who came here on Tuesday at the invitation of "The London Daily Mail" to study reasons for the disparity between the high wages and prosperous living conditions of the American worker and their own lower wage standards, gained considerable light in a tour of several industrial establishments in Brooklyn yesterday.

They were curious to know how it was that the average wage of the American toiler virtually doubled that of his British brother, and how it was possible for industries here to offer such fat envelopes to their employees and at the same time compete successfully in world markets.

After a study of the Brooklyn Edison plant and the factory methods of the Mergenthaler Linotype Company in Brooklyn, the delegates remarked that one of the vital reasons for the disparity was that the American worker was capable of producing and actually did produce more than the British toiler in a given time.

This he was enabled to do, they learned, because of the high standards of efficiency obtaining here, mass production methods, the utter perfection of organization for which the American industrialist seems always to be striving, and labor-saving devices evident on every hand.

The comments of the delegates were voiced by Sir Percival Phillips, special correspondent of "The Daily Mail," Fenton MacPherson, of the same newspaper, and William Mosses, J. P., who had a prominent part in the British Labor Ministry during the war.

Mr. MacPherson also noted that the welfare facilities offered by the American plant were much more elaborate than in England and that equipment and quarters were more beneficial. This was evidently the result, he observed, of the frequent scrapping of plants here to make way for expansion and development. His countrymen are loath, he said, to tear down a building that has served twenty years or more.

Mr. Mosses dwelt on the turnover capacity of the American employee. The average industrial worker here, he noted, was of as high moral type as his British confrere, and is much better equipped for his job both with respect to knowledge and tools. "There is no doubt," he commented, "that with this high rate of production the American worker earns his pay."

Our Own World of Letters

By JAMES MELVIN LEE

BURTON RASCOE prints in The Bookman for September—the first issue under his editorship—a personality sketch of his life-long friend, Keith Preston who died July 7, 1927. Preston had been formerly an associate professor of Latin at Northwestern University, but he was more widely known as the conductor of the column "Hit or Miss" in the Chicago Daily News. While still a professor of Latin he was a brilliant contributor to the late Bert Leston Taylor's column in the Chicago Tribune where he signed his contributions by the pseudonym "Pan."

Preston later brought together many of his contributions to the Tribune into a book entitled "Types of Pan." His last volume, made up of contributions to the "Hit or Miss" column of the News, carries the appropriate title "Top O' the Column." Many of Preston's admirers, however, would put first the collection of verse that appeared under the title "Splinters." In the "Outside World of Letters" Preston is best known for his book column "Periscope" which he also conducted for the News.

At the time of Preston's death he was preparing a series of articles for The Bookman on the Greek and Latin classics. These articles were to interpret classical authors in terms of modern life in such a way as to interest those who were not familiar with the Latin and Greek authors either in the original or in the translation.

Only one of this series had been completed by Preston. This one, which takes up Martial as a Roman journalist, also appears in The Bookman for September. It shows how Martial was the first Roman writer to make the public his regular meal ticket. His epigrams might have had some such column heading as "Rome Day by Day" so filled were they with wit, satire, cynicism, and more especially, a generous helping of scandal. He is said to have covered the courts and auction rooms in Rome that he might rewrite for his periodical the snappy comebacks of lawyers and auctioneers.

A Latin youth stood looking up at the Aqueduct which furnished the water for the baths of Agrippa. As he did so, he was struck by a falling icicle and killed. Preston tells how Martial reported the tragic oddity and even tacked on this Brisbanian moral:

> What may not happen when cruel Fortune wills?
> Where are we safe when aqua pura kills?

Preston then goes on to show how Martial who had come from the provinces to Rome under Nero was a journalist in the worst as well as in the best sense of the word. He shows how Martial was the first press agent and professional panegyrist and had a long list of fairly profitable accounts—but adds that the rewards of a press agent in Neroian days were pathetic when compared with the pickings in these so-called enlightened days.

Martial even though the official press agent for the imperial circuses, found good copy in the books sold in the stalls along the Appian Way. Among the samples given is the following:

> "Arms and the man" we read till dinner;
> Full fed, a man wants something thinner,
> Light verse is then extremely pat,
> So, reader, here is Vergil's 'Gnat.'"

Another point about Martial is thus emphasized:

> To balance Martial's commercial activities we may mention that he anticipated and opposed the halitosis motif in modern advertising. An epigram addressed to a man who took patent medicine to cover bad breath, assures him that the remedy is more flagrant than the disease.

This quotation from the article is sufficient to show Martial at his worst:

> No tabloid goes so far in meeting the popular taste for pornography as Martial did, and in contradiction to the modern belief that the lid was off among the dear old pagans, he was often and severely criticised for immoral verse. In reply, he rather weakly pleads that although his muse is naughty, his life is beyond reproach, and that his writings are not intended "virginibus puerisque."

One important thing that is overlooked in the article is the advertising which Martial inserted at "regular rates." In reading Martial myself, I have been repeatedly struck with the way in which Cosmos, the Colgate of Nero's day, had preferred position to advertise lip-stick, rouge, perfumes, etc., to the ladies of Rome.

ALWAYS a writer of rare charm, Earnest Elmo Calkins of the well-known advertising firm of Calkins and Holden turns in good copy to the Atlantic Monthly for September in an article "Insuring Insurance."

After mentioning how advertising men sometimes call advertising "business insurance" he takes up the matter of advertising insurance.

Among the campaigns which he specifically mentions—evidently with praise—are those of the Metropolitan Life and the Hartford Fire Insurance Companies.

What holds insurance companies from advertising in his opinion is partly indifference and partly ignorance. He does not hesitate to say that insurance companies which do not advertise have no conception of what advertising could and should do for them, since they think of it only as a means of immediate selling—something they say they do not need.

But if those who control the destinies of insurance companies will read this article by Mr. Calkins they may change their minds. Insurance does need advertising.

WHERE is journalism going? That i the rhetorical question asked by Th New Republic in an editorial in its issu for Aug. 31. The article is based upo a recent newspaper consolidation in Pitts burgh and elsewhere. EDITOR & PUB LISHER is quoted as being "The reliabl journal of the trade."

The New Republic, of course, is not i sympathy with such consolidations but i frankly admits that nothing could be mor futile than to utter jeremiads about th developments discussed somewhat in de tail in the editorial. It concedes that thes consolidations are, in the main, economi in character and hence it is useless t make gestures of moral disapprobation.

A gleam of hope, however, is found i the fact that American journalism i growing more self-conscious and self critical.

Another gleam of hope, so the editoria points out in conclusion, is that as the bi papers grow bigger, small ones may ap pear, "mushrooms among the oaks, pro duced for comparatively small groups o men who have common interests, paper operated at small expense and attainin without much difficulty a degree of eco nomic independence which insures intel lectual independence."

The last hope expressed is that journal ism will prove to be a self-bailing boat.

FOR readers of "Our Own World o Letters" the article in The Natio for Aug. 31 that will most appeal to them is the one that carries the caption "Hones ty in Advertising." Written by Raymon Fuller, it puts the advertisements of man companies into a test tube for a detaile analysis of how much truth they contain The results are not what those who ar interested in truth in advertising will fin especially gratifying. In many adver tisements only "traces" of truth can b found. Just what advertisements lool n addition, the Tass is the center of great system of radio broadcasting. e times a day important news is adcasted to all newspapers within a ius of 3,500 miles from Moscow. ividual newspapers receiving this rs broadcast it in turn to the people their respective territories. Radio wspapers in Russia are, according to . Lee, comparable to American tabds.

n interesting type of journalism is cribed by Mr. Lee when he takes up ll-newspapers. These are posted on walls of important buildings. With e exceptions, they are typewritten and the organs of the workers and emyees in a given undertaking or estabment. All the matter in these wallwspapers, including the illustrations l cartoons, comes from the workers mselves who elect their own editors.

Of the official organ this mention is de:

he official government newspaper in Moscow s the Izvestia, or the News. The official newser of the Communist Party, edited by Boukin himself, is the Pravda, or the Truth. re is a popular saying in Moscow, attributed Krassin, that "There is no news in the Truth no truth in the News."

In Chapter IX, Mr. Lee takes up how world learns of Russia. He says:

The Foreign Office in Moscow showed me a li of all foreign newspaper correspondents loed in Russia. Any foreigner going to Russia f the purpose of gathering news must get a mit to perform just this function. Thus the overnment knows exactly who all the corresndents are, and is able, of course, not merely censor for telegraphic information, but, by owing up the newspapers themselves, to see ether any written material which has been iled out has escaped the censor.

There are some 40 newspaper correspondents the whole of Russia, representing the foreign ss, and practically all of these live in Mosw. All information concerning what occurs hin the 13,000,000 square miles of Russia ich does not happen to reach these correndents at Moscow goes to the outside world m the Tass Agency, and through Reuter, to news agencies of the world. Thus, all Russn news, outside of that gathered in Moscow, which reaches the world from Russia itself may be said to be government-made news.

Other details are thus given:

The Russian Foreign Office maintains a press bureau under the direction of the very able Mr. Rothstein. Associated with him is a Mr. Shoubin, who has spent much time and learned much of his journalism in New York City. For that matter, it should be said that the greatest of all Russian journalists, Mr. Boukharin, also held at one time the editorship of Novy Mir (New World), a Russian newspaper in New York City. But then, to name all the members of the present Russian Government who have either lived or worked in America would be almost to publish a roster of the Government itself.

Under the Press Bureau is the censor. The Foreign Office maintains that the censor is wrongly named; they say that his real title should be "Official to aid the foreign correspondents in obtaining correct information." The newspaper correspondents told me that the censor seldom actually (as was so frequently done during the war) cuts out parts of their dispatches. When he finds something in one of their telegrams which he thinks is wrong, he is apt to call the correspondent on the telephone and advise him that he has the situation inaccurately put down. He then "suggests" to the correspondent what the actual facts are.

The following paragraph reports how American newspapers are represented:

American newspapers and news associations maintain eight correspondents in Moscow. The Associated Press, United Press, the Universal (Hearst) Service, each have their independent representatives. The Associated Press does not obtain its information from the Tass Agency. Individual American newspapers represented by their own correspondents in Russia are: New York Times, Chicago Daily News, Christian Science Monitor, Boston, and Jewish Freiheit, New York.

England has no direct correspondent in Russia. Several correspondents for American and other newspapers supply the information that goes to newspapers in England.

A. W. HINSHAW, who is a product of the Emporia Gazette and hence a graduate of the William Allen White School of Journalism, is represented in The Century Magazine for September in a short story entitled "The Story of Frances Perkins." In this story she tells about the fight of Frances Perkins against selfishness, prejudice and vested interests.

A Rotogravure Advertiser's Story

The Canada Dry Ginger Ale, Incorporated, used rotogravure advertising for the first time in The New York Times Rotogravure Picture Section on April 29, 1923. In a letter dated August 31, 1927, this Company says:

"Results from that advertisement were so remarkable we determined to give rotogravure preference for future advertising wherever possible. Consistently adhering to that decision, we now use it from coast to coast.

"The pulling power of that first advertisement in The New York Times was so convincing that in the short period we have been in business, approximately a million dollars have been spent in this form of advertising."

The New York Times, pioneer in in the rotogravure field in the United States, leads all publications throughout the world in volume of rotogravure advertising. The Times published 838,592 agate lines in eight months this year, over half a million lines more than any other New York newspaper.

The Sunday net paid sale of The Times is in excess of 650,000 copies.

METHODS SUGGESTED FOR CURBING RECKLESS NEWSPAPER DRIVING

Drivers Should Be Enjoined from Throwing Bundles Without Stopping Trucks—Governors Urged to Check Speeding—"Rush Buyer" Over-estimated Is Belief

By ARTHUR E. TUCKER
(Managing Editor, The American Accountant)

IT is indeed good news, this movement on the part of newspaper publishers to cut the insurance rate on trucks they operate, to which reference was made in last week's EDITOR & PUBLISHER.

Enforcement of a few simple rules will go a great way toward curbing the recklessness of drivers and helpers on newspaper delivery trucks.

For instance, drivers and helpers should be strictly enjoined from making a delivery of a bundle of papers without first bringing their truck to a complete stop. It is not fair to the public, no matter how eager prospective readers may be to obtain copies of late editions, to permit a truck to race down the center of a busy thoroughfare, with a helper standing in the rear, tossing heavy bundles of papers to the sidewalks, in front of news stands.

I have no way of knowing how many injuries result from this practice, nor in fact, whether any injuries have been caused in that way, but it would be easy to cripple a man, woman or child for life by hitting the person on the sidewalk with one of these wildly thrown bundles.

The helpers pride themselves on their accuracy in throwing off the bundles. It is a game with them. They take joy in getting the bundle somewhere near the store or news stand which is to retail the newspapers. I know the feeling they have, for when a boy I carried a route for a newspaper and learned how many steps were to be saved by throwing a paper to a porch. Even with but a single paper it was possible, by rolling it tightly, to knock over a flower pot or to put a dent in a screen door. How much more efficacious a bundle of twenty-five or fifty papers must be, in breaking up inanimate objects, to say nothing of fracturing people's bones!

Would a baker's truck be permitted to dash wildly down a busy thoroughfare, tossing off baskets of fresh bread or hot rolls, on the plea that by thus speeding up delivery to the retail shops it was made possible for consumers to obtain their bread or rolls while still hot? Wouldn't the police put a stop to that procedure quite promptly?

If the proprietors of newspapers really want to put a stop to speeding, on the part of their drivers, why not put governors on the trucks, preventing them from proceeding at a rate faster than 15 miles an hour?

The newspapers have shown the public now what they can do in the way of speedy handling of edition after edition. It has been a very convincing demonstration. But is the need for speed really as great as the drivers and those in charge of the distribution of papers would like to have us believe?

The insurance rates tell their own story. Evidently newspaper trucks are causing much damage to persons and property, else the insurance companies would not have to be reimbursed so heavily for the protection they give the newspaper proprietors.

In addition to the safety first work and the educational work with drivers, the offering of prizes for careful driving, and the like, which are suggested, might it not be advantageous for publishers to check the delivery schedules which now call for covering so much ground by trucks in such a short time?

The issue seems to be, is the early delivery of newspapers worth what it costs in injuries and property damage? The public is not so much interested in these early deliveries as are the newspapers themselves. A few minutes one way or another will not make difference to the consumer-reader. Has a study ever been made of the period of time covered by the sale of a given edition? If that period is found to be two hours, how much of the sale of that particular edition takes place in the first half hour, the first hour, the last hour? If these figures could be compiled accurately it would probably be found that the "rush" buyer, who presumably is standing around waiting to grab each new edition as it is delivered, is in a minority as compared with the regular, daily buyer who likes a certain paper and buys it at a stated time each day.

This appears to be mostly an afternoon newspaper problem. The rushing done by drivers of morning newspapers is usually done to catch trains, and at a time when the streets are not crowded.

If there is really the demand for speed which circulation managers seem to think exists, why not paint the delivery trucks red, equip them with whistles and bells, and give them right of way over ordinary traffic. That would at least give the driver and pedestrian due notice of the approach of the speeders, just as the fire apparatus announces its approach. This is said in all seriousness. If there is the demand for speed that the driving of trucks today would seem to indicate, why not recognize it and take steps to make it more safe for all concerned?

The newspapers are simply inviting regulation by the authorities under the present method of operation. Would it not be better to do the regulating before the authorities are compelled to step in?

IDAHO USING AUTOMOBILE PLATES FOR ADVERTISING

THE state of Idaho is advertising its famous product, the Idaho potato, by a novel method. The legislature has passed a bill which allows the 1928 automobile license plates to be cut in the form of a potato and colored a light brown. Citizens of other states will be reminded of the Idaho product every time they see an Idaho car.

The plan is to advertise a different product each year.

The Rising Tide

National advertising is a rising tide. Each year larger sums are invested in newspaper advertising.

One newspaper, in 1926, carried more than 8,000,000 lines of national advertising. And of this newspaper's total linage, national advertising was more than 25 per cent. Many other papers carried in excess of 4,000,000 lines of national with substantial increases each year.

National newspaper advertising is playing an increasingly important part in building the sales of automobiles, washing machines, vacuum cleaners, phonographs, furniture, pianos, jewelry, radio and other lines.

Million dollar newspaper advertising appropriations are becoming almost as common as millionaires.

The newspaper which today records an annual volume of 8,000,000 lines of national advertising, may record 15,000,000 or 20,000,000 within five or six years.

National advertising in daily newspapers is a rising tide. Possibly it will be 30%, 40% or 50% of a newspaper's total volume within a decade or less.

What is your newspaper doing toward securing a share of this revenue?

Advertise your market and your medium in the NEWS paper of the newspaper publishing and advertising fields.

By MARLEN PEW

ON a sultry mid-summer evening we leave the printing office for an hour and wander through an East-side park, swarming with happy children and their mothers. This is the center of the Italian section of the metropolis, the dress of the people is picturesque and the passion of the kids for play is evidenced by their delighted shouts and squeals. Swarthy women wreathed in red bandannas sit on easy benches, nursing their babes and gaily gossiping with their neighbors. A thousand youngsters are developing their arms and legs and backs on swings and slides. We pass an occasional youth and maiden, roaming hand in hand, happy in thoughts of love. The grass is green and smooth as a billiard table; birds twitter in the trees and there is the silvery tinkle of a fountain. It is with a start that I recall that as a young reporter I met on this site the greatest local newspaper writer New York ever saw, that this charming park was at that time the foulest slum in America, that this one man's magnificent sympathy for the poor poured out in print was responsible for the magic change in these city blocks and that this park now bears his honored name—Jacob A. Riis.

SOME men are in the newspaper business to make money, some to gain fame, some for romance, some for social prestige, many as a mere means of livelihood and many more because they recognize the power of the press for good and desire to play a part in advancing the cause of civilization. Jacob Riis exemplified better than any reporter I have ever known the latter theory. His life work was a public benefaction and the poetic justice of giving his name to a park that was once Mulberry Bend is sublime. When I knew Riis he was a reporter for New York Sun. He was assigned to Police Headquarters and most of his time was spent in the little row of houses, opposite Mulberry Street Headquarters, where the reporters held forth. At that time his fame was already wide. He did not cover the general news, as did other men, but would watch the police slips—bulletins posted in a window in the basement of headquarters for the benefit of the newspaper men—and when a story in his line would crop up he would go out on it, or send some young fellow on the staff to get the facts, and then would write one of those masterful column-and-a-turn articles that were his specialty—a story which would be thrilling in human interest, would preach a sermon without one word of sentimental gush, would harpoon lazy or corrupt politicians or incompetent public institutions without one word of editorializing and would do more to reform the evil conditions abounding in New York's slums than all other agencies of the city combined. That was the genius of Jacob Riis and almost unbelievably wonderful were his achievements. He died 13 years ago, at the age of 65. His name should be an inspiration to every man who writes for the daily press. His example is a model for all youth which strives for unselfish ideals.

EARLY in his newspaper work—he served as a reporter for New York Tribune, Associated Press and later for the Sun—Jacob Riis said: "The slum stands for ignorance, want, unfitness, mob-rule on the one hand and for hard-heartedness, indifference, self-seeking greed on the other. We are brothers, whether we own it or not, and when the brotherhood is denied in Mulberry street we shall look vainly for good citizenship on Fifth avenue." What Mulberry Bend was when Riis first began to tell the public the unvarnished truth about it is in the memory of many newspaper men of this day.

THE curbs were lined by tiers of shabby, filthy, overcrowded tenements, lacking ventilation, lighting, water and devoid of privacy or domesticity. There were rows of rear houses built back to back with other buildings, with unventilated, narrow black courts and alleys. Here swarmed poor immigrants and their children, tramps, stale beer bums and vagabond women. Men and women lived in cellars deep down in the ground. Riis found 34 families living in rooms which had been built to accommodate only four or five families. He found children sleeping in wet cellars and scores of rooms where untrapped soil-pipes opened into every floor and poisoned the tenants. He described the old-fashioned barracks, frame buildings, as "dens of death." He told the public that these houses had been built to sell and as a result of his exposé of the greed of landlords and builders one of the latter was sent to Sing Sing for ten years for manslaughter as the result of one, a shaky tenement, falling and killing many people.

Riis, on one occasion, wrote of a house that had been built on speculation, wherein sewer pipes were run into a 3-foot cesspool in a basement, resulting in 20 cases of typhoid fever within a single year. As a result of some of his stories about blind tenement rooms, the Board of Health compelled landlords to cut more than 40,000 windows, letting in the daylight and air, within a single year. These facts merely suggest the extent of his reform.

JACOB RIIS was a native of Denmark, received a Latin school education in his native land and came to New York as an immigrant in 1870. He plunged into any kind of work he could get to do, once as a truck farmer, later as a coal miner and still later as a book agent. He told the story of how after wandering all day through Brooklyn streets with his dog, attempting to sell copies of Dickens' "Hard Times," he sat down on a doorstep to rest and was presently accosted by a genial old gentleman whom he recognized as the principal of a school of telegraphy which Riis had attended for a short time when he had sought to master that art.

"What are you doing?" asked the old man. "I am trying to sell copies of this book," Riis replied, handing out a volume of Charles Dickens' celebrated Coketown story. He admitted that the title was appropriate for he had had no sale that day. His friend advised him that he had only just learned that a job at $10 per week was open for a reporter on the New York City News Association and as fast as his legs could carry him Riis hastened to 23 Park Row to claim the situation. That was the start of his newspaper work. He covered general assignments for a time but made his hit when he began to write sympathetically of political and social conditions as they affected the poor of the East side.

ALL of Riis's reforms were worked out while he served as a reporter. Many editorships and political jobs were offered to him and he wrote a number of valuable books and occasionally lectured, but he never claimed nor wished to be anything better or worse than a newspaper reporter. His unremitting fight was against unwholesome, unhealthy tenements as the breeding places of disease, crime and human defeat in every form. It was R who exposed the city's water supply contaminated and thus brought about t purchase of the vast Croton water-she He forced the destruction of rear ten ments. His nagging pen, after more th 25 years, wiped out Mulberry Bend a several other cesspools of vice, disea and crime and turned them into parl Riis spoke the word that incited The dore Roosevelt, then police commission to abolish the evil police station lodgi houses. For years he fought for a finally secured a truant school. Truan once were imprisoned as juven criminals. He fought basement bakesho and overcrowded clothing sweat-sho He liberated thousands of children w toiled in box factories and paper-flow shops located in tenement rooms. He d manded light for dark tenement hall-wa and thus opened hundreds of places whe crime, vice and filth lurked. For eve story he wrote for the emancipation child labor he wrote another one in fav of playgrounds for schools and the ope

FOSSILS INCORPORATE IN BROOKLYN

Queer Old Society Perpetuates Friendships Made in Amateur Journalism Days—Edison, Daniels, Moses, Curtis Are Members

A certificate of incorporation was obtained in Brooklyn late last week by The Fossils, a society whose members have sworn to perpetuate friendships formed forty or more years ago among "amateur journalists."

Among the Fossils whose names were listed on the certificate of incorporation signed this week by Supreme Court Justice Charles J. Druhan were Thomas A. Edison, James M. Beck, Cyrus H. K. Curtis, United States Senator George H. Moses and Josephus Daniels.

The aims of The Fossils, Inc., in addition to perpetuating old friendships, are "to keep alive the memory of those years by occasional reunions; to defray the maintenance expenses of a library in which printed relics of their earlier literary efforts are now bound, indexed and stored, and otherwise to benefit by community of fellowship and loyalty in their old friendships as youthful printers."

Fifty thousand papers bound in volumes and stored in the library of the organization, at 150 Nassau street, testify to the industry of the Fossils-to-be between 1860 and 1890. The pages are yellow now, and there is a Victorian ring to the early love poems of staid present-day members of the bar, physicians, aldermen and prosperous business men.

During this period boys and girls who called themselves amateur journalists printed little papers of different sizes and varying degrees of editorial excellence. Everything was discussed, from current political happenings to the profoundest problems in religion and sociology. During one period in the '80s several thousand of these papers were published by journalistic aspirants. They exchanged courtesies, had their editorial squabbles and criticized without mercy the grammatical slips of rival editors.

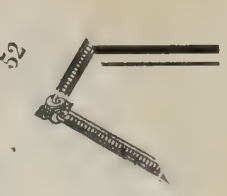
In July, 1876, sixty-two boys who published these papers or contributed to them, met in Philadelphia and organized the National Amateur Press Association. Mr. Beck, known as "Becky" to the members of the convention, was the youngest boy in attendance. For years afterward the Press Association held its annual convention in different cities. Besides publishing papers, the boys and girls turned out little books, samples of which are on exhibit in the library on Nassau street. This was during the "dime novel" period and Indian themes and talks of wild adventure by sea and land were popular. Some of the titles are lurid echoes of this type of story. Others are reminiscent of Oliver Optic and Horatio Alger.

Some of the booklets are good examples of printer's art turned out on the small presses of the period, which found a ready sale among the boy journalists. In 1873 three of the boys went to the Vienna Exposition and printed a paper, The American Youth, once a week while it lasted. They paid their own expenses by writing dispatches to the papers in America on the exposition.

All three are dead but The Fossils, Inc., feel that their exploits deserve to be chronicled as an epic incident in the history of boyhood journalism.

On July 3, 1926, after the passing of fifty years, the survivors of the 1876 convention assembled at Philadelphia. The ranks were considerably thinned, but Mr. Beck delivered the address of welcome, as he had done at the first meeting.

The certificate of incorporation provides that the territory embraced by the organization will be the United States of America; the office will be in Manhattan; there will be twenty-five directors, and the annual meeting will be held on the last Saturday in April.



The president of the Fossils is Dr. Charles W. Richardson, of Washington, physician to President Coolidge. The vice-presidents are Frank White, David W. Jagger and J. D. P. Wingate. The treasurer is Joseph Dana Miller.

The twenty-five incorporators are: Mr. Beck and J. Edson Briggs, of Washington; Charles H. Class, Mr. Curtis, Mr. Daniels, Mr. Edison, Charles K. Farley, Carl Fique, J. Austin Fynes, Charles C. Heuman and Frederick E. Ives, of Philadelphia; Owel M. Jefferds and William A. Kelsey, of Washington; Frederick W. Koch, of Bloomfield, N. J.; Frank J. Martin, Mr. Miller, Senator Moses, Dr. Richardson, Frank L. Searer and William G. Snow, of Meriden, Conn.; Dr. E. B. Swift and Leonard E. Tilden, of Marlboro, N. H.; John F. Walsh, Jr., Frank White and Louis C. Wills.

NO CHARGE TO EMPLOYERS

,000 BUILDING-AN DRIVE URGED

ess of California Companies Cited Speaker in Suggesting Co-operative Drive—Business Increased 89 Per Cent

The building-loan associations of the United States should have a fund of at least $1,000,000 a year to carry on a consistent, nation-wide advertising campaign, A. A. Anderson, secretary of the Pacific Coast Building-Loan Association of Los Angeles and secretary Building-Loan Secretaries Association of Southern California, told the Pacific States Savings and Loan Conference at its recent convention in Los Angeles. Two hundred building-loan officials from ten western states attended the meeting.

According to Anderson, the building-loan associations of the United States, which now number more than 13,000, with assets of approximately $6,000,000,000 and 12,000,000 members, have an unequalled record in co-operative endeavor, community service and in the promotion of thrift and home-ownership, as individual associations.

"But there is no business in the United States of the magnitude of the building-loan business and which is conducted along the same fundamental lines in every section of the country that has made such little progress in a co-operative way, to bring before the people the facts about their business, as these mutual savings institutions," he said.

In his appeal for a national advertising campaign Anderson cited the results of the first six months of the co-operative campaign now being carried on by the building-loan associations of Southern California at a monthly cost of $3,000.

"According to data compiled from the State Commissioner's reports, the building-loan associations in Los Angeles, where most of the advertising was done, showed an increase in assets during the first six months of the co-operative advertising campaign, Oct. 30, 1926, to April 30, 1927, of $10,948,887.66, or an 89 per cent increase over the increase in assets for the six month period immediately preceeding the campaign, when the gain was $5,776,619.85.

"The data also shows that the 102 associations in Southern California during the first six months of the campaign showed an increase in assets of $22,740,538.12 which is a 46 per cent gain over the growth recorded for the previous six months.

"The tremendous effect of consistent, co-operative advertising is seen when the increase of 89 per cent for Los Angeles associations only and 46 per cent for Southern California associations is compared with the gain of only 4.6 per cent over the increase in assets by associations in the state other than Southern California, during the same six month period."

Consistent use of newspaper space was recommended by the Los Angeles man as being the most effective and economical way to acquaint the public with the business and increase the size and prestige of the associations.

Anderson called attention to the advertising policies of several nationwide business concerns which are using newspaper space to the exclusion of all other forms of advertising. "These great companies have learned, from the expenditure of millions of dollars just what medium brings the greatest result. In the swaddling clothes of our advertising effort, we can well give consideration to these facts," he said.

"The larger portion of the amount spent in the Southern California campaign was for newspaper space," Anderson said.

SAID CHARLIE TO CHARLIE

Levine and Hand of New York American Become Friends in Paris

"Hello, Charlie! This is Charlie. I've just flown over here to London!"

Thus Charles A. Levine spoke to Charles Hand, political writer of the New York American, over long distance telephone from London to Paris, shortly after the owner of the Columbia had completed his sensational solo flight across the English channel. The two Americans had met and become friends at Le Bourget field, where Mr. Levine entertained the New York newspaper man at dinner. Hand is confident that if Levine starts out on a westward trans-Atlantic hop he will make his objective.

"He's just that sort of man," said Hand, who returned to New York this week after a month's vacation in Paris.

Mr. Hand explained what he said was the inside story of the break-up with Drouhin, the French aviator.

"Levine was worried about flying next to a man who couldn't speak English," he declared. "Percival Philip of the New York Times Paris staff had prepared a chart with different questions and answers all numbered written in French with their English translations. It had been the plan to paste this chart on the dashboard of the 'plane and Levine was to point out the English question which Drouhin was to understand from reading the translation of the corresponding number. Then he was to reply by pointing to another numbered line on the chart.

"This didn't suit Levine, and he wanted to break off with Drouhin diplomatically. He asked me to help him draw up a statement which I did. Before we gave out the statement, Levine took matters in his own hands and hopped to London."

Hand returned to this country on the same ship with Lee Ettleson, managing editor of the New York American, Mrs. Ettleson and their two children, Benn Lee and Emily. The Ettlesons had spent a month in Britanny.

A FULL page spread made up of about 50 different advertisements comprising the firms that make up the payroll bulders of Indianapolis, published recently in the Indianapolis News, is attracting considerable comment.—THORA EIGENMANN.

In order to stimulate the sale of farm products grown or manufactured in Minnesota, an organization of Minneapolis business men, "Minnesota Boosters," are getting advertisers to run copy on exclusively Minnesota products. A recent full page placed by the Minneapolis Alllied Grocers offered housewives bargains on all-Minnesota products. A four column box in the copy read: "Every product made and grown in Minnesota, marketed in this territory, means increased community purchasing ability for other merchandise. The farmers are the only American producers of raw materials who share in the ultimate selling price of the manufactured article. Boost community and state prosperity by using Minnesota products."—P. O. NARVESON.

Due to the fall primaries and November general election, advertising departments should have little difficulty securing political advertising.

One of the biggest and most informative space ads that can be used is that of publishing a specimen primary or general election ballot, with an impressive X voting mark aside the politician who is inserting the ad.—FERD W. COLEMAN.

Work up interest among the raw milk producers of your city to advertise. Cooperative campaigns may be inaugurated by these small dealers who as a rule have no pasteurization equipment or machinery, but who may advertise collectively to exemplify the health qualities in raw milk. There is much to be said for it.—C. M. L.

Have you rounded up your local antique dealers lately? A little corner once or twice a week devoted to their interests will bring you extra revenue.—JAMES M. MOSELY.

OLD PAPER FOUND

A perfect facsimile of the first newspaper ever printed in America, the Boston News-Letter, has been discovered in the walls of a building, that is being demolished, at Poughkeepsie, N. Y. The copy of the paper was discovered in an envelope. The paper is dated "From Monday, April 17, to Monday, April 24, 1704." It contains news from abroad that was received and rewritten in news form by John Campbell, postmaster of Boston.

PUBLISHER HOST TO STAFF

Staff members of the Washington (N. C.) Daily News spent a day recently as guests of publisher W. D. W. Bishop and Mrs. Bishop at their summer home in Morehead City, N. C. It was the fifth annual staff outing.

THE Rochester (N. Y.) Democrat and Chronicle is offering cash prizes in a "Hunting Scenes Gravure Contest." With the hunting season in the offing this would be a good way of arousing interest among the sportsmen. The pictures include any phase of hunting such as stalking deer, fox, bear and moose, pointing dogs in action, etc. The first prize is $5 with $1 for each picture used in the Gravure section.—D. P.

One woman called the police to pull a dog out of an ice cream freezer and another wanted the cops to call her husband every morning while she was on vacation. A story about the telephone calls that come into the police station in your town should be interesting and amusing as well as educational. They call headquarters for the time, railroad schedules, locations of fire, etc.—LAWRENCE L. JACOBS.

In its monthly remittance envelope to correspondents the Lancaster (Pa.) News Journal encloses a card with suggestions as to why some of their personals letters have been cut. This monthly reminder serves to check up on the correspondent and at the same time lets him know that the editor is watching what he sends in.—W. W. D.

Do you make it a point to have some member of your staff keep in close touch with the mail carriers in your city? They are known to hundreds of persons and stories of their individual activities will often make good news.—DEAN H. ASHTON, Trenton, N. J.

Do you vote a straight party ticket? If not, why not? Why did you join your party when you first registered? Such questions will tend to liven up your pages with letters and verbal replies both from male and female readers. Any number of other political questions may be asked.—PAUL M. WILDRICK.

The Andalusia (Ala.) Star recently obtained the cooperation of the Superintendent of Education to issue a "Special School Edition" which carried a brief write-up of the 83 rural schools in the county. It proved to be a very popular and constructive feature, and will be repeated each year.—OSCAR M. DUGGER, JR.

To every girl whose name appears in the marriage license list, a New England newspaper sends a beautifully engraved card stating that a copy of the paper will be delivered at her new home each day for six months, without charge, with the best wishes of the paper, if new address will be sent to the circula department. The stunt can be depe upon to build circulation if accu records are kept and the free subscrip is followed up as soon as it expire B. W. T.

Covering the first Market...

of course means — NEW YORK STATE.—And where can you find so ideal a market for greater buying power and better means of coverage than in the Empire State?

New York State offers the advertiser 11 million consumers, all living in a small concentrated area. These people pay over a quarter of the nation's taxes. They are users and buyers of every commodity that the world grows, or manufactures.

These people are reached by a group of papers second to none. In the group listed below you will find dailies whose coverage is national and international, whose prestige as molders of public opinion is recognized the world over. These are the newspapers that influence this great buying power.

Where can you find then a more effective market as an outlet for your products, and better means of reaching this market, than thru these outstanding newspapers.

For the second time in eight years, David Lawrence took a vacation this summer and the busy typewriter in the Traffic Room of the Consolidated Press (which didn't even pause when the camera flashed) was silent.

DAVID LAWRENCE is back on the job and the wires are again carrying his daily dispatch on National Affairs into every state in the Union.

Page One of the story that is being written, edited and filed in the picture was on the way to copy-desks in newspapers throughout the country before "D. L." had typed his initials on the last page.

The wire part of the job took only a few minutes. But the other part took longer; hours of consultation, interview, research, collection and rejection of material, and years —nearly twenty—in learning how to get and write "the big story of the day" for some seven million readers.

The David Lawrence Dispatch is a success because it tells the how and why of National Affairs so that the expert is satisfied and the man in the street knows what it's all about.

The David Lawrence Dispatch is typical of the Eight Hour Day Leased Wire Service of Over 400 Independent Neighborhood Stores Use The Chicago Daily News Exclusively

THERE'S keen competition for neighborhood business. In price, quality, service and advertising methods the neighborhood storekeeper must march step by step with his larger and more highly organized competitors. Naturally, when the neighborhood stores of Chicago began to organize into co-operative buying and advertising associations, they followed the lead of the successful large retailer and concentrated their advertising in The Daily News.

FOUR ASSOCIATIONS:

The Federated Department Stores . . . . . (43 stores)
The Neighborhood Houseware Stores . . . . (246 stores)
The Consolidated Hardware Stores . . . . . (51 stores)
The Winchester Stores . . . . . (87 stores)

. . . . representing over 400 independent neighborhood stores, located in every section of Chicago and its suburbs, have been formed. In the first seven months of 1927 they placed 46,055 agate lines of advertising, their entire advertising appropriation for Chicago, with The Daily News.

The advertising practice of these enterprises is evidence that The Daily News produces results that can be measured definitely in daily profits. These business men are "close to the ground" in Chicago business affairs. Their reliance upon the block-by-block, neighborhood-by-neighborhood effectiveness of The Daily News is a significant indication of the advertising situation in Chicago.

1927 STATE FAIR SETS NEW RECORD

Creamery Industry Grows 100% Since 1920

IOWA PRODUCES 15% OF NATION'S BUTTER

Exports Amounted to 142,666,000 Pounds in 1926

With 455 creameries, making 172,257,863 pounds of butter annually, Iowa is nearing top rank among the butter-producing states of the United States. In 1920, the last available government figures rank Iowa seventh in this industry. Since that time, the production of Iowa creamery butter has doubled while the national output increased but 20 per cent.

Shows Remarkable Growth

The table at the head of this article shows the remarkable growth of this industry in Iowa. The figures are taken from the fortieth annual report of the dairy and food division of the Iowa Department of Agriculture which comments as follows: "The increase in the making of butter here in Iowa has in a sense been marvelous, yet it has been taken care of by the trade and there is every indication that the consumption demand will take care of further increases."

The value of Iowa creamery butter produced last year is estimated at $75,322,441. Iowa exported 142,666,000 pounds of butter during 1926 which brought $60,000,000 into the state.

YEAR BY YEAR GROWTH OF BUTTER OUTPUT

Year	Number of creameries	Number of pounds creamery butter
1920	399	89,179,612
1921	414	98,740,419
1922	422	124,168,089
1923	429	132,878,353
1924	445	140,497,549
1925	448	165,834,574
1926	455	172,257,863

87½% Is Creamery Butter

Eighty-seven and one-half per cent of the Iowa output is made in creameries. When the farm-produced butter is added to the creamery output, 197,257,863 pounds represents Iowa's contribution to the industry in 1926. This was 15 per cent of the nation's butter for that year.

The butter industry covers the state, with practically every one of the ninety-nine counties deriving an important part of its income from dairy products.

STATE SAVES FARMERS $650,000 IN TAX-CUT

Iowa Executive Council Makes 3% Reduction in Land Valuations

Iowa farmers will have approximately $650,000 more to spend this year than last as a result of the 3 per cent reduction of farm land valuations for taxation purposes made last month by the state executive council.

In the hearings before the council, President Hearst of the Iowa Farm Bureau federation presented reports from more than 1,000 farms throughout the state, showing that they were not producing a return in keeping with the valuations which had been placed on them for taxation purposes.

Farm leaders here stated that this was a move in the right direction and brought farm lands more nearly on a par with other classes of taxable property from the standpoint of the amount of taxes which had to be paid.

This is a reduction from an average of $68.20 an acre to $66.20 an acre. Livestock valuations, reduced in 1926, were left at about the same figure as last year.

PROGRESS CONTINUES IN HARD ROADS WORK

Paving Hastens Rural Improvements, Says Editor

Ames, Sept 17—Paving, gravelling, tiling, bridge and culvert construction contracts totaling $1,182,226.06 for work in twelve Iowa counties were awarded the first of this month by the Iowa state highway commission.

These contracts mark a continuation of the state-wide program of road construction which, when completed, will provide a network of hard-surfaced highways throughout the state.

"Compared with many other states, a far greater proportion of the total amounts of these contracts are for actual paving, and less for grading and collateral work," according to Reece Stuart, Jr., editor of The Central Constructor. "Iowa is fortunate in having already completed a large proportion of the work on curves and on grades which should precede paving. As a result, the paving program can be put into effect more quickly than would otherwise be possible."

In Mr. Stuart's opinion, the state-wide highway program is hastening public improvements in small towns and rural communities.

"Towns without surfaced streets will pave so as to have suitable connection with the paved primary roads.

"Before a large number of these towns, especially those of 500 population or less, can lay any paving, they will have to install sewage systems and water-works," concludes Mr. Stuart. "Thus paving of the primary roads leads to further progress in bringing city living conditions into the communities formerly classed as 'rural.'"

ATTENDANCE SHOWS BETTER CONDITIONS, SAY BUSINESS MEN

Interpret Record Crowd as Indicative of Good Outlook

NOTE BUYING ATTITUDE

Exhibitors Comment on Interest Shown by Farmers

The Iowa State Fair, regard by business executives as an accurate barometer of the business outlook of Iowa, this year broke all previous fair attendance records with a grand total of 429,051. In establishing this new record, the 1927 fair exceeded by 20,688 the mark set by the 1925 fair, which previously held the all-time attendance record. The attendance this year was 66,864 greater than that in 1926.

Pass 60,000 Four Times

More than 60,000 went through the turnstiles on four different days this year; and on August 29, a new single-day attendance mark was set when 70,363 persons entered the grounds. This year the Iowa Fair earned a net profit of more than $70,000, a margin surpassed only by the 1920 fair at which time the admission charged was fifty per cent higher than it was this year. Even with a higher admission, the 1920 fair earned only $5,000 more than this year's.

The total receipts of the fair this year were $355,533.87 or $59,939.26 greater than the 1926 income which was $295,594.61.

From the record attendance and unusual interest, exhibitors at the fair, especially among the farm machinery companies, draw two important conclusions:

First, that the past twelve months have brought a marked improvement in the Iowa business situation.

Second, that the buying attitude is more noticeable than for some years past.

More Interest in Equipment

"Undoubtedly there was more interest in our exhibit this year than in any of the four or five preceding years," states R. E. Jaquier, branch manager, International Harvester Company. "Over former records we made a substantial increase in live prospects obtained."

Similar reports were received from the John Deere Plow Company, where it was also stated that there was less price-objection talk among the farmers this year than ever before.

ADVERTISERS who understand the Iowa situation know from experience that the consumers' market there cannot be properly sold without the use of newspapers in these twenty-one key cities.

Complete in Ads and in News—

¶ A man wants a complete newspaper—a newspaper that will give him the news of his city, his state, his country and other countries in properly balanced proportions.

¶ In Baltimore only the Sunpapers measure up to this specification.

¶ A woman wants a complete newspaper, too. But her idea of completeness is often determined by the advertising columns. She wants the newspaper in which the department stores and specialty shops tell their stories in the fullest detail—listing every offering of every department.

¶ In Baltimore only the Sunpapers carry the full and complete advertisements of all the leading stores.

¶ Through the columns of the Sunpapers—Morning, Evening and Sunday—those who know Baltimore best reach the homes of Baltimore in the quickest, surest, most economical way.

¶ Your campaign in Baltimore can be complete only through the use of the complete newspapers—the Sunpapers.

Linage Drop, Chiefly In Classified, Cuts Newspaper Revenue Only 2.3 Percent

Steady Progress of Smaller Newspapers and General Rate Increases, Largely Offset Volume Recession, Survey of 1,300 Newspapers' Six Months' Total Indicates

By ARTHUR ROBB

OSS of only 2.3 per cent in newspaper advertising revenue from the record tal of 1926 is indicated by the most mprehensive linage statistics ever gath-ed by EDITOR & PUBLISHER. These gures, printed elsewhere in this issue, clude the reports for the first six months 1927 for 1,247 daily and Sunday news-apers in the United States, published in 0 cities, which have a total population excess of 56,000,000. Canadian figures ver 16 morning, 41 evening, and 3 Sun-ay newspapers published in 34 cities the Dominion.

Total linage of the United States daily ewspapers was 2,859,245,685 agate lines, which 238 morning (and morning and unday) newspapers printed 880,055,231 gate lines, and 687 evening (and evening nd Sunday) newspapers carried 1,979,-0,454 lines.

Comparison of these figures with the mi-annual tabulations printed since 1923 dicates that the total investment in news-aper advertising of all kinds during the resent year will approximate $768,000,-0, against an estimated total for 1926 of 786,000,000, the drop being, as stated, out 2.3 per cent.

This is surprisingly small in view of ie monthly reports from the larger cities hich have chronicled an average total cession of about 4 per cent. This picture as been more or less accurate as an dex of the metropolitan markets, but is not so true a portrait of the smaller ties, many of which have been holding ven with, or running ahead of their 1926 ıage.

Rate increases have been general, the fference between the average rate of all ewspapers as of June 15, 1927, and Dec. , 1926, being about 7 per cent. The te increases, of course, do not apply orizontally on a newspaper's linage ructure; their first and principal effect usually upon the general, or national lvertising, which will average less than per cent by volume of the total linage. heir influence on local display and assified income is slower and dispersed er a larger volume of business. Rate creases, however, have apparently suc-eded in halving the loss in revenue dicated by the linage reports.

Much of the loss reported by metro-litan newspapers has fallen in the classi-ed columns, reflecting the duller tone of siness since last October. "Help anted" is said to be far below last ar's early volume and "situations anted" offset neither in volume nor in venue the deficiency. Other classifica-ons are also off, even the columns fering used automobiles for sale. Dis-ay columns, as a whole, have not fallen r behind last year's marks, though radio lvertising has not come up to the ex-ctations that 1926 records nourished, d automobile advertising is also below e 1926 level. Uncertainty as to Ford's ans is believed to have been the principal ctor in curtailing automobile publicity, d men in touch with this field expect e forthcoming Ford announcement to art a new avalanche of automotive copy. eports are current that every newspaper in the country will be on the Ford lists, but no confirmation of this report or any other of the myriad rumors can be obtained from Detroit or from N. W. Ayer & Son, in charge of Ford's advertising.

Tobacco copy has more than held its own with 1926 and is now one of the most important elements in national linage. Food advertising is becoming increasingly important and the linage devoted to refrigeration, heating appliances and other household supplies has not lost any of its impressive bulk. Building is not proceeding at the rate seen in 1925 and 1926 and in some localities the supply of roofs has apparently overtaken the demand, but the market for the newer household appliances retains its absorbtive capacity. The great manufacturing enterprises which control a large portion of this class of goods are beginning to use newspaper advertising on a scale commensurate with their production. They are working on the principle of large volume and small unit profit and find that widespread newspaper advertising sells volume at a low unit sales cost. They have found no other road to market which fits their needs.

Local display advertising is also approximately equal to last year's figures, though department stores are not using multiple page displays so frequently as in past years, or rather are not using so many pages in their largest announcements. The multiple page idea is still popular, both in the local and national fields, and many new uses will be found for it. It lends itself especially to the new automobile era in which individual manufacturers are making two, three or more, grades of cars to fit varying tastes and incomes. It has been used effectively and profitably by department stores for a type of advertising which smacks of the terse unvarnished merchandising of the mail order catalog. It was recently used by a store in Dallas, Tex., to solicit by name thousands of new charge accounts. It can be used, as it has been by some national advertisers, to present an institutional message which could not be delivered adequately in a single page or double-truck. It is, of course, always available for co-operative special advertising efforts, though the "special page" idea is losing its favor among many newspaper advertising managers.

Linage records achieved by stunts and one-time efforts were deprecated by practically every advertising manager who spoke at the convention of newspaper men held this week in Jamestown, N. Y. Many of them frankly stated agreement with the merchants who regarded the special stunt pages as donations to the publisher. Mammoth editions built around an occasion unimportant in itself, solely for the purpose of gaining volume linage were also in disfavor. One advertising manager stated that his publisher called for his weekly linage reports with stunt linage, which he called "forced" eliminated from the regular totals and stated separately.

Possibly this is not general. EDITOR & PUBLISHER still receives each week a large number of special editions issued for every conceivable occasion and sometimes of evident merit and benefit to the community. More frequently they are the familiar combination of blatant advertising and more blatant puffs of the advertisers, the space evidently having been sold with the understanding that a write-up was part of the contract. In fact, a letter recently reached this office, addressed to an advertiser and signed by a publisher, in which the bold-type statement was made that the advertiser had the privilege of writing his own puff, to be published as written without the interference of the editorial department.

Few defenders will be found for that type of journalism, but its practice in less extreme, if more hypocritical form, is not unknown in excellent newspaper circles. Its doom will probably come from close analysis of cost sheets, for the present structure of newspaper rates will not permit immense rebates in the form of free space to one-time advertisers.

may indicate a realization by the intelligent publishers and advertising managers of New York State newspapers that linage in itself will not make a newspaper more deserving of support from the reading and advertising public and that linage sought and won solely for its own sake is likely to defeat the objects sought by advertiser and publisher. It takes great courage to show a linage loss and in addition to take the loss in gross revenue that comes from abandoning stunt pages and editions, but several men at this meeting informed the writer that they had assumed the risk and found that their efforts bent toward obtaining new national and local accounts had changed the feared revenue losses into gains. They feel that they have substituted solid business which will benefit the advertiser for ephemeral linage which often could not help the people who paid for it. Little, if any, additional expense has been incurred.

If the meeting at Jamestown reflects a new spirit among the men who build the advertising columns of newspapers, if it means that the insane race for linage, for, of, and by itself, is near its end, it is evident that the newspaper business has golden days ahead of it. Perhaps the great volume of 1926 was the peak for all time so far as linage is concerned, but there is little reason to predict that now. If so large a volume could have been attained when no small portion of it resulted from the efforts of men who had the sole object of getting volume business, without regard to its merchandising possibilities for the purchaser, why should not a considerably greater volume follow when these men turn their efforts to developing advertising that will have genuine value in making sales for the space-buyer. Some of the men who were present at the New York meeting are keeping in day-to-day touch with their local retail outlets for nationally-advertised goods, maintaining records that are a continuous survey of local merchandising conditions in important lines.

Volume linage is of little importance in the space-buyer's eyes if the publisher is ready instead to talk in matter-of-fact words about local merchandising conditions vitally affecting the advertiser's welfare, stating facts that will stand the repeated proof of sales and keeping his facts abreast of changing conditions. The advertising manager who related his merchandising plan in detail told inquirers that the additional expense was a $30 a week man, plus promotion outlay totalling $900 in a year. His efforts had landed in that period 75 new national accounts!

Rates are of slight importance, either, when the space-buyer is shown such a road to his market, paved smoothly and marked legibly. His selling expense is reduced to a minimum by the newspaper's mapping of the sales area, and the newspaper does not need to assume any of the burdens that belong primarily in the advertiser's budget, nor to undertake the sale of the goods.

The present controversy over combination rates will fade like a puff of smoke in a gale if the publishers will abandon their defensive attitude and boldly demonstrate to advertisers their operations are economically sound, that their resources permit market investigations beyond the reach of smaller units, that no advertiser can afford to overlook the broad highway to sales and profits afforded by their low-priced unduplicated circulation. This ideal has not yet been realized by all combination publishers, but it is true of many. Few of them have devoted effective promotion to their principle of operation and the same general terms which describe the economically sound unit have been used with equal force by combination establishments which are not so firmly rooted. The use of these general terms by all, with the possibility that they can be refuted in the case of a few, has enabled the campaign of the Association of National Advertisers against the combination rate idea to gain a strength which is not inherent. It can be overcome by straightforward statements of fact by publishers to whom the A.N.A. charges do not apply. It cannot be overcome, but will probably be strengthened by the practice of a few combination publishers in issuing misleading linage reports.

These are now very rare, as inspection of the tables that follow will reveal, but a few remain who count their morning and evening linage twice, even though both editions are sold and billed as a unit. EDITOR & PUBLISHER has refused to validate such totals whenever it has it has been possible to obtain more detailed information, and now receives few requests for such listing, but a few publishers remain who will supply their information in no other form. CHARACTER OF AGENCY SERVICE IS TAX ISSUE

Fuller & Smith, Seeking Refund of Levy Paid Under Protest, Contend Their Income Is from Personal Service Not from Capital in Hearing Before Federal Judge

THE question of whether an advertising agency is a corporation or a professional service was argued in court this week when the suit of Fuller & Smith, widely known Cleveland advertising agency, against Internal Revenue Collector Carl F. Routzahn of the 18th Ohio district to recover $20,811 income taxes paid under protest was tried before Federal Judge D. C. Westenhaver in Cleveland. The case was submitted to the judge under mutual agreement on Tuesday.

Suit was filed March 24, 1927, by the law firm of which Newton D. Baker, former Secretary of War, is the head, and the government was represented by Ralph E. Smith, John H. Pigg and D. L. Bergerson of the general counsel of the Internal Revenue Office, Washington.

Fuller & Smith presented more than 20 exhibits and several witnesses were examined in their behalf. The government had no witnesses and rested its case after cross-examining the plaintiff's witnesses, who included Tim Thrift, Cleveland advertising counsellor; Harry Dwight Smith and Patrick W. Murphy of the plaintiff firm; E. M. Statler, head of the Statler Hotel chain; Clarence L. Madden, Paul E. Zimmerman, William G. Chaney.

The government had some exhibits regarding the Craig Tractor Company which was financed by the plaintiff concern. Plaintiffs contended they are not subject to the capitalistic tax collected—that they render professional service—that their income is derived from special fees and commissions paid by clients.

The answer of the collector denied most of their contentions. It was filed by District Attorney Bernstein.

Two causes of action were taken by Fuller & Smith. First, one seeking to collect $1,382 paid under protest for January, 1918. The collector fixed the firm's income for that month at $3,374 and first imposed a total tax of $2,129, or more than 59 per cent of the net income. By application of sections 327 and 328 of the Revenue Act the tax was subsequently cut to $1,313.

On Oct. 7, 1926, the collector determined a deficiency against the concern for $1,313 covering January, 1918. No appeal was made to the federal board of tax appeals within the period allowed by law. The collector assessed additional income excess profits and war profits for the month in question to the extent of $1,313, with $68.49 interest. On Jan. 30, 1927, the company paid the total claimed under protest, doing so to prevent the imposition of further penalties, informing the collector all legal means possible would be resorted to in the federal courts to recover the alleged excess tax paid.

The second cause of action covers the 12-month period ending Jan. 31, 1919. The plaintiffs set up that the present corporation succeeded a partnership formed under Michigan laws, asserting that the seven former firm members all became stockholders in the company and were active in rendering service to clients. These include the American Multigraph Company, the Burrows Adding Machine Company, National Carbon Company, the Glidden Company, the Hotel Statler, Inc., the National Lamp Works, the General Electric Company, the Timken Roller Bearing Company, the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, the Beaver Board Company, the Willard Storage Battery Company.

In setting out that the firm renders professional service the plaintiffs contended:

First—they are engaged primarily in writing advertising.

Second—in placing this advertising, making space purchases for clients, etc.

Third—are engaged in preparing advertising messages to the buying public.

Fourth—are engaged in checking and verifying the advertising thus planned.

Fifth—and are otherwise engaged professionally in counselling clients as to best methods to promote sales campaigns through properly worded and placed advertisments in newspapers, magazines and trade publications.

They alleged 100 per cent of their income comes through special fees and commissions, that the stockholders all signed an agreement whereby in the event of death or leaving the concern the shares held would revert to the remaining stockholders—that the capital stock of the concern is no factor in bringing profits—that the firm had no government contracts when the alleged excessive tax was imposed.

On Jan. 27, 1927, a claim for a refund was filed. It was rejected March 12, 1927.

The income taxed for the 12-month period was $50,757.24, and the total tax first levied was $30,931, or more than 60 per cent of the income.

Subsequently the collector under sections of the tax law already cited, cut the whole to $18,466, but caused another assessment of an equal amount, and an additional interest charge of $962, because of nonpayment. the plaintiffs paid the whole to avoid further entanglements.

The suit asked for the return of $1,382, with interest at 6 per cent from January 20, 1927, and for $19,429, with interest at 6 per cent from the same date.

The collector's contention was that the capital of the concern was a factor in its earnings, contended that 100 per cent of the firm's income is not from professional service, and asserted that the plaintiffs did not set forth sufficient data to prove their suit plea. He admitted the firm had no government contracts when he imposed the burdensome tax, and the tractor deal financed by the plaintiff figured considerably in the hearing.

Judge Westenhaver asked many questions and assisted materially in clearing of the atmosphere of the whole contention of the plaintiff.

William G. Chandler of New York, general business manager for the Scripps-Howard Newspapers, testified in behalf of the Fuller-Smith concern. He said that an advertising agency such as the one in court is not derived from invested capital but "from personal service to clients."

"Financial responsibility is not the main consideration of an advertising agency," he said, "but the kind of service rendered is its main asset. As an illustration, the Scripps-Howard papers do not consider the financial ability of an advertising agency but they do investigate thoroughly the standing and responsibility of the advertiser.

"No matter how strong an advertising agency might be financially the Scripps-Howard Newspapers would not publish preferred advertisements of an irresponsible firm."

Rudolph Norberg, vice-president of the Willard Storage Battery Company of Cleveland, testified that the services of the Fuller-Smith concern and similar agencies are entirely personal and that such an agency can not be classed as capitalistic.

In cross-examination, P. W. Murphy, secretary-treasurer of Fuller & Smith answered questions by Ralph Smith representing the government in trying to show that the agency is capitalistic as a corporation as well as a personal service institution because of its financing the now defunct Craig Tractor Company in 1917.

Murphy admitted that Fuller & Smith invested $68,000 in the tractor concern. He said that Norman Craig advanced the idea that tractors were built along the wrong lines and testified that his concern put up $28,008 for experimental equipment and subsequently advanced further financial aid for the purpose of acquiring a factory site in Cleveland and the erection of a building.

He said that when the concern collapsed the stockholders received but nine cents on the dollar invested.

Newton D. Baker contended in his arguments that only capitalistic corporations are subject to the tax levied on Fuller & Smith.

Elsworth M. Statler, representing the Statler Hotels, clients of Fuller & Smith, testified that services of an advertising agency are similar to those of an architect.

Tim Thrift testified along similar lines. No witnesses were called by the government which relied on cross-examination of the petitioners' witnesses. The scope of the contention of the Fuller & Smith agency involves a broad principle and millions of dollars. The case will be carried upon an appeal if Judge Westenhaver decides adversely.

Briefs will be filed by both sides.

Ralph E. Smith, representing the government, sought to bring forth facts indicating the concern derived its income from invested capital. The court is asked to determine whether Fuller & Smith come within the personal classification of the income tax law or should be classed as a corporation. The question involves vast sums of money throughout the country and will probably come to trial in every district federal court. Murphy, with Baker's law firm, has been working on the case for many weeks. Murphy is secretary-treasurer of the firm, and Rudolph Norberg, vice-president of the Willard Storage Battery Company, Statler and others testified that the concern renders personal service.

FRANCIS WITH BROOKLYN DAILY

N. Y. World Veteran Now Advertising Manager, Brooklyn Citizen

James A. Francis, a member of the New York World's business staff since 1890, has been named advertising manager of the Brooklyn Citizen, succeeding P. J. Flannery.

Mr. Francis organized the World's Resort Information Bureau in 1897, and assisted Bert Chapman in creating that newspaper's merchandising department. George Larke sent Mr. Francis to New England, where for four years he developed accounts in that territory. He was later made supervisor of national advertising and in addition cared for the renewals of department store contracts.

FEDERAL TRADE CASE RESUMES OCT. 3

Commission Summarizes What Suit Against A. A. A. A., A. N. P. A., S. N. P. A., A. P. A. and Six Point League Involves

Resumption of the hearings in the agency commission case before the Federal Trade Commission was set for Oct. 3 in Chicago in an announcement issued to newspapers Sept. 15 by the trade body in Washington. The hearings will be at 2243 Transportation Building, Chicago, and John W. Addison, trial examiner, will preside. Eugene W. Burr, attorney, will represent the Federal Trade Commission. Respondents in the case are the American Association of Advertising Agencies, American Newspaper Publishers Association, Southern Newspaper Publishers Association, Six Point League, and American Press Association.

In its statement the Federal Trade Commission summarized the case as involving the following points:

"(1) Alleged agreements by these associations upon a minimum rate of commission to be received by advertising agencies for advertising service with provision that advertising agencies shall not do business with advertisers at figures lower than this rate.

"(2) Alleged refusal by the publishers' associations to recognize advertising agencies that share with the advertiser any part of the commission paid to recognized agencies, or, to permit the commission received by recognized advertising agencies to be paid to agencies that share with the advertiser any part of such commission.

"(3) Rights of advertisers and publishers to do advertising business on a market free of artificial regulation of commissions.

"These alleged practices are being investigated by the commission on the basis of unfair competition in trade."

Negotiations were entered into at the request of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association several weeks ago by the respondents and the Federal Trade Commission in an effort to settle the case by stipulation, but the respondent organizations did not agree to certain conditions laid down by the commission regarding jurisdiction. The commission then considered the negotiations closed and ordered a trial of the case.

ADVERTISING PRAISED AT BABSON MEETING

Abbott, Executive Director, American Institute of Steel Construction, Calls Ads Most Constructive Economic Forces Existing Today

Advertising was described as "one of the most constructive economic forces in existence today" by Charles F. Abbott, executive director of the American Institute of Steel Construction, addressing the 14th annual National Business Conference at Babson Park, Mass., this week.

"Advertising I consider the third essential element of an intensive and unintermitting effort to turn the product into cash or accounts receivable," he said. "The powerful influence of advertising has been proved many times during recent years, both in the cultivation of old markets and the development of new. I am not an advertising man, but in my opinion advertising is one of the most constructive economic forces in existence today. Intelligently directed, it will tend to stabilize prices, improve profits and smooth the road for the salesman."

Some of the examples he quoted were:

"The British fruit trade in 1926 boosted the sales of fruit by $10,000,000 by an expenditure of a $200,000, or $50 in sales for every dollar spent in advertising.

"The tremendous increase in sales of Chevrolets is at least partly explained by the fact that the Chevrolet led all makes of cars in newspaper linage during the first four months of 1927.

"In 1923 the sale of India tea in the United States was 4,000,000 pounds. Between 1923 and 1925 $400,000 was spent in advertising. In 1925 the sales amounted to 17,500,000 pounds. Until a little over a year ago Japanese tea was not advertised, and even then the advertising was confined to eight Middle-Western States. The importation of Japanese tea is less than half what it was thirty years ago."

Mr. Abbott listed the following steps for developing markets:

"Formulate and adopt selling policies in keeping with conditions which are fair to all concerned; employ research workers to develop new uses for the products, and aid in the cultivation of old and new markets; initiate aggressive selling methods, using care in the selection and training and supervision of salesmen; base sales approach on service of product rather than price; establish price with regard to fundamental cost and fair profit; take advantages of tremendous possibilities offered by intelligent advertising; organize the industry on a co-operative basis to undertake projects beyond single concerns."

BROUN "NEITHER FOOL NOR IDEALIST"

So Former N. Y. World Columnist Declares of Himself in His First Article for The Nation

By James Melvin Lee

Vol. I, No. 1 of "It Seems to Heywood Broun" appears in The Nation for Sept. 14. In making his bow to his new public Mr. Broun says:

> Kind friends have said: "You are a fool. Newspaper work's your own line. Why don't you go back to the World, which is ready to forgive and forget?" Others have passed the epithet "Idealist." But I'm not altogether a fool, and I haven't earned the other classification either. By following the line of least resistance, I came to be a personal journalist. Some years ago I discovered that it was easier to write about myself than any other subject. Less home work was required. I might still write about myself and be happy enough on some paper or other if only I were sufficiently fertile in humorous notions. Editors might be bored, but they were never angry if I wrote about my fish, my child, or even my fingernails. But when something burns inside and that comes out, the situation's very different. Newspapers don't like their men to get mad about things.

Broun, however, then goes on to say that American newspapers are much more fair than they were 20 or 30 years ago. As they have grown bigger they have become more courteous. Most of them no longer reflect the opinion of a single editor, but rather that of a group of editorial writers. Doubtless he was speaking of the World when he commented as follows:

> Upon the paper which I know best, important editorial policies depended upon debates in which several men participated. When there was sharp differences of opinion a compromise was inevitable. The view expressed often represented the opinion of no single member, but merely a policy for which all could summon a grudging assent. A composite opinion, like a composite photograph, is apt to be a little vague and misty round the jowls.

Mr. Broun believes that those who would pursue the pleasant calling of personal journalism must own the papers to which they contribute. But even such a condition does not offer an infallible way because of the popular feeling that newspapers prosper by careful refraining from anything that will offend any considerable group of people. The Catholics would not like this and the Methodists would not like that are phrases not unknown in editorial conferences, according to Mr. Broun. On the other hand, he believes that the harmfulness of irritating readers has been greatly exaggerated—from a strictly business point of view. Readers will forgive "a newspaper for doing almost anything but boring them."

$155,000 SUIT AGAINST UTICA (N. Y.) PRESS

Mat Service Claims Violation of Contract When Store Uses Mats Outside Its Territory

The Utica (N. Y.) Morning Press is named defendant in a suit for $155,000 damages brought by the Standard Corporation, Chicago advertising firm, papers for which have just been filed in the United States district court at Utica, N.Y. This was announced by George J. Hatt, Albany attorney, who is counsel for the Standard company.

A suit for a similar amount also has been filed against the H. G. Munger & Company, department store of Herkimer. Both are charged with violation of contract.

The Standard company sells a mat and cut service for advertisers to supply to newspapers along with their advertising copy. It is alleged that the Munger company was sold this service with the stipulation that it was to be used only in Herkimer and the surrounding territory. The suit alleges that such cuts and mats as sold by the Chicago concern were used in Munger advertisements which appeared in the Utica Press.

When these were seen in the Press by members of a Utica company which also had bought the exclusive Utica rights to the Standard company's service a complaint was made.

The action is being brought under the Federal statute covering the violation of copyright.

DAILY BUYS PRIZE BEEF

Sioux City Tribune Then Presents It to Local Charity Homes

The Sioux City (Ia.) Tribune, represented by John H. Kelly, editor, this week purchased one of the prize winning baby beeves exhibited at the Sioux City Interstate Baby Beef Show and sale and announced that the meat will be distributed among children's homes of the city.

The steer, which tipped the scales at 950 pounds, will be slaughtered by a local packing company and be given to the Boys' and Girls' Home, St. Anthony's Orphanage Home of the Good Shepherd and the Florence Crittenton Home.

NEW YORKERS ASKING A. B. C. PROXIES

Last Year's Committee of Bresnahan, Walker and Martin Reappointed to Attend Chicago Meeting—No Specific Object in Mind

Letters went out from New York this week notifying newspaper members of the Audit Bureau of Circulations that the same committee which represented the Publishers Association of New York at last year's A. B. C. convention has been re-appointed to attend the sessions next month in Chicago.

Members of the committee are J. F. Bresnahan, business manager of the New York World, Fred A. Walker of the executive council of the New York Sun; and Edwin G. Martin, business manager of the Brooklyn Eagle.

Mr. Bresnahan, the chairman, informed Editor & Publisher, that although the committee has no specific objects in mind, proxies are being asked from Bureau members unable to attend the October convention.

"Last year, after the A. B. C. convention," Mr. Bresnahan said, "more than 100 publishers who sent proxies to us wrote suggesting that the committee attend all A. B. C. conventions and we believe in keeping faith."

Text of the letter sent out by the Publishers Association of New York follows:

"The Publishers Association of New York has authorized the same committee that attended the A. B. C. convention last year to attend the sessions next month in Chicago.

"The committee does not know of anything extraordinary that may come up at the A. B. C. convention, but something may arise affecting the interests of newspaper members. If you were satisfied with the work of that committee last year, you may care to send your proxy to the committee again this year. You may rest assured that their best efforts will be made to represent you adequately.

"Obviously, your proxy in the hands of newspaper members may serve you better than if sent elsewhere.

"We are enclosing proxy for your signature, and if you send us the proxy we suggest that you make certain that later proxies may not be sent to others, thus avoiding some confusion which occurred last year."

The convention program follows:

Thursday, Oct. 20, 10 A. M.—Group meetings to discuss subjects which will be announced before the meetings. Divisional lines will not be drawn and all who are interested in the given subject are invited to take part. This is a new feature of the convention.

Thursday, Oct. 20, 2 P. M.—Regular divisional meetings.

Friday, Oct. 21.—All divisions will join at 9 A. M. in the general meeting as usual.

The annual dinner will be held Friday evening in the Grand Ball Room, Stevens Hotel.

WASHINGTON HERALD SUED

Springfield, O., Man Asks $100,000 Damages in Libel Action

Dr. Edwin C. Dinwiddie, of Springfield, O., and temporarily residing in Washington, D. C., has filed suit in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia against the Washington Herald, demanding $100,000 on account of an alleged libel, published in July.

The alleged libel charged, according to the details of the complaint, that Dr. Dinwiddie had misapplied the greater part of an appropriation of $10,000 voted by Congress to the State Department for the purpose of entertaining the 15th Annual World's Congress Against Alcoholism which was invited to meet in Washington in 1914.

HUGE MAP UNVEILED

The largest relief map of North America ever made was unveiled last week by the Chicago Tribune in the Tribune Tower. The map fills a panel 17 feet high and 12 feet wide.

FINANCIAL GROUP HOLDS ANNUAL MEET

Teaching Public Thrift Biggest Present-Day Problem, Speaker Says —Snodgrass Offers a Speech

With amazing prosperity in the United States and the trend of the times being to "make money fast and spend it now," financial advertising experts are confronted with the problem of inculcating the message of thrift in the public mind, according to Walter S. Greenough, assistant to the president of the Fletcher Savings and Trust Company, Indianapolis, speaking before the annual convention of the Financial Advertisers' Association in West Baden, Ind., this week.

Taking as his theme, "What Business Is Profitable?" the Indianapolis banker pointed out specific instances of helpful service being performed by the American Bank at little cost to the institution.

"Financial advertising," he explained, did its part to make the bank a great service station for the public in the handling of commercial and family finances. The banking business is operated on the most permanent basis of any industry in the country."

Tuesday was "Indianapolis Day" at the Convention, with a large number of speakers from the Hoosier capital and the evening's entertainment provided by Indianapolis bankers.

With more than $100,000,000 being spent annually for advertising by the country's 30,000 banks, trust companies and bond houses, much significance was attached to this twelfth annual meeting of the association, which drew representatives of financial institutions from all parts of the United States.

Prominent financial publishers in attendance at the convention held an interesting meeting Tuesday to further plans of the Financial Publishers Association during the coming year. Temporary officers elected included Clifford De Puy of Des Moines, Ia., president of De Puy Publications, as president, and Richard A. Durham of New York City, publisher of The Bankers Magazine, as secretary.

Among those in attendance at the meeting were George Edwards, publisher of The Coast Banker, San Francisco; Prather Knapp, editorial director of The Bankers Monthly; Irving Vivian, publisher of The Commercial West, Minneapolis; Mortimer L. Stevens, president, and Joseph Solomon, vice-president of the Midwestern Banker, Milwaukee; Haynes McFadden, of Atlanta, publisher of the Southern Banker; M. I. Harshberger, publisher of the Florida Banker; Herbert Schryer, of Detroit, managing editor of the Burroughs Clearing House, and William H. Mass, of Chicago, vice-president of the De Puy banking magazines.

Speaking on "Newspaper Co-operation," Owen Connor, financial editor, Philadelphia Public Ledger, said:

"Co-operation among financial institutions and newspapers which specialize in financial news has become so valuable to both groups that it may be regarded as a necessity.

"The more you succeed in making the name of your bank or investment firm well known in your community the more will the financial editor look to you for news. In other words, you will have started an endless chain in obtaining public attention. Then it becomes doubly important to make news. Be sure that you keep yourselves active, for in the first essential, action is news. You float a new bond issue, you join in the organization of a news business in your community such as a subway or a new bus line, or you subscribe as an individual to some worthy civic project. Do it and tell the editor about it. He will be glad to get the news and you will win the indirect but sure return that comes from keeping your name before the public in favorable light.

"Right here, please let me urge upon you and all of you that you should not call your items before the editor as 'publicity.' The word has become hateful to the men in a newspaper office. If it is publicity in the proper sense it is advertising and belongs in the paid columns of the paper. If it is news you only cast suspicion upon the item you offer when you call it publicity. The suggestion applies mainly to ordinary occurrences in interest. When something big is to happen in your bank, it is wise to notify the editor in advance and let him send a good reporter to cover it. When a reporter writes the story it is a certainty that the item escapes completely from any danger that it might be classed as publicity.

"Co-operation then, consists in the newspaper publishing all the complete, reliable, worthy financial news and in barring its advertising columns to the unworthy, at the same time that the banker opens his doors to the reporter and helps the reporter to obtain facts that will make interesting reading. With a clear mutual understanding of what is news and of what is advertising and with the will to help each other co-operation becomes easy."

"There is one big mistake which we make with regard to advertising," Rhey T. Snodgrass, advertising manager of the Minneapolis Journal, said in his address before the association Wednesday, "and that mistake is that we are accustomed to regard advertising as an item of expense and to refer to the sum spent in advertising as an appropriation."

FAREWELL TO CARROLL

Associates Honor Indianapolis Executive Joining Pittsburgh Daily

Frank T. Carroll, advertising director of the Indianapolis News, was tendered a farewell dinner at the Columbia Club, Sept. 9, by friends and business associates. Mr. Carroll is leaving the News to become assistant business manager of the Pittsburgh Press. Curtis A. Hodges, general manager of the News, was toastmaster.

Among those who spoke were Don U. Bridge, who becomes advertising manager; Dan Carroll, brother of Frank Carroll and New York special representative; Hilton U. Brown, John E. Lutz, Chicago representative of the News and Mrs. L. M. Abbott of the classified advertising department

SEARCH FOR OLD GLORY DESCRIBED BY BROOKLYN TIMES EDITOR

By JOHN N. HARMAN

John N. Harman, editor of the Brooklyn Times, was the only newspaper man on the steamer Transylvania when that vessel made her memorable search for the wrecked monoplane, Old Glory, in which Hill, Bertaud and Payne were lost.

WHEN I went into the dining salon of the steamer Transylvania about eight o'clock on the morning of Sept. 7 with Mrs. Harman, I had no idea that I was soon to experience one of those rare sensations which only a newspaper man could either feel or adequately understand. Within a very short time I realized that I was the only newspaper man approaching a point in mid-Atlantic upon which the attention of the whole world was centered and that it might be my good fortune to send from that lonely spot on the waste of waters the news that the trans-Atlantic plane, Old Glory, had been discovered and her crew and passenger rescued, or the sadder story that they had been engulfed in the sea.

When I went on deck I found that we were plowing along through an expanse of gray waters roughened by a sharp gale. The sky overhead was a solid mass of gray cloud. The air was clear, however, and vision could easily traverse space in any direction. This was not my first voyage on the Transylvania and I was on terms of personal friendship with Captain Bone and his officers. I found, however, that on receipt of the distress call from the airplane all these officers, usually communicative and friendly, had become silent and preoccupied.

It was 9:40 when we arrived at the spot where, according to Captain Bone's calculations, Old Glory must have struck the water. That was 49.55 north and 40.39 west. There were 14 men on lookout duty and the crews of all the life boats were standing by. There was intense excitement among the passengers. I was, of course, highly desirous of getting off to the Brooklyn Times the message which would indicate that Old Glory was lost. I went to the radio room and wrote the following dispatch: "Transylvania on spot. No trace of Old Glory. Search being continued. Harman." The radio man told me that he would have to call up the Captain and in a few seconds I heard him at the telephone telling Captain Bone that one of the passengers wanted to get off a dispatch to his newspaper. Then he turned to me with the announcement that the dispatch could not be sent as Captain Bone had given orders that the radio should be used only for signals between ships and official messages bearing upon the search. My protest that radio messages from the shore were coming in was unavailing.

It was a decidedly uncomfortable situation for a newspaper man with a story for which the whole world was waiting. I went out and tried to get the attention of Captain Bone, but every time I signaled to him from the deck he was looking in another direction. It was not until close to noon that I finally caught his eye and received permission from him to join him on the bridge. We argued for a long time before he reluctantly gave me permission to inspect a message he had dictated to the purser for transmission to the Anchor and Cunard lines, the contents of which I might use in a short message to the Brooklyn Times. The result was the snapping out from the antennæ of the Transylvania of the message which was the world's first news that Old Glory could not be found.

I have since learned that our managing editor, Mr. Hebb, and our publisher, Mr. Fremont C. Peck, knowing that I was on the Transylvania had been eagerly expecting this communication which was published in our noon edition. Mr. Hebb called up the United Press office and communicated the contents of the message to that agency. As a result I received a radio message from the United Press in New York requesting a story and with some difficulty prevailed upon Captain Bone, who meanwhile was receiving messages from the New York and London newspapers, to allow me to send off about 200 words, including his description of the search.

It was the Captain's opinion that the newspapers were showing bad taste in deluging him with radio messages, while he was engaged on an humanitarian errand. I did not discuss the ethics of the matter with him, but having in the meanwhile received requests for information from the Associated Press and from some of the English newspapers, I was glad when after dinner, he sent for me and showed a more considerate attitude toward the requirements of the press. It was then not so difficult for me to convince him that after all the object of the newspapers in disclosing the news of the search and its result to a world hungry for information was not entirely unworthy. The Westminster Gazette had radiographed me a request for 150 words, and as by this time I was sending far more extended messages to the United Press and the Associated Press, I let the London newspaper have 1,000, which cost them 50 pounds in tolls.

After the search was over Captain Bone and his officers were again communicative and friendly and one of them prepared for me the illuminating chart published in the Brooklyn Times on Monday, Sept. 12. The experience was one which, as a newspaper man, I shall always recall with pleasure.

BUSINESS BUREAUS TO MEET NEXT WEEK

Frank Gannett, of Gannett Newspapers, Will Be Speaker at Annual Sessions in New York—Organization Problems to Be Discussed

The annual conference of the National Better Business Bureaus will be held in New York Monday to Thursday of next week with delegates from the 42 bureaus in the country attending. Conferences will be held at the Bar Association, in West Forty-fourth street. The Commodore will be the official hotel for delegates.

James C. Auchincloss of New York is president of the organization and also chairman of the New York City Bureau. Carl T. Finn of Cleveland is chairman of the program committee. A newspaper speaker during the sessions will be Frank E. Gannett, publisher of the Rochester Times-Union and president of the Gannett Newspapers.

The Monday conference has been arranged for bureau officers, directors and counsel. Two meetings will be held for this group on the first day. Bank executives and bureau men will talk. Tuesday will be devoted to financial subjects with talks given by financiers prominent on the New York Stock Exchange and officials of the National Better Business Bureau. Wednesday will be given over to merchandise subjects and Thursday, the last day of the conclave, will be occupied with discussions of organization problems.

The National Better Business Commission is an affiliation of the National Better Business Bureau and the recognized local Better Business Bureau. It functions as the co-ordinating body for the independently incorporated bureau.

Edward L. Greene, managing director of the national bureau, is chairman of the board.

NEW MAGAZINE TARIFF

Canada Imposes 25 Per Cent Duty on Fiction Publications

The Canadian Department of Internal Revenue has announced that 49 magazines published in the United States and hitherto free from duty, will hereafter be subject to a 25 per cent duty and classified as unbound novels.

The department held that "magazines not containing a reasonable amount of critical and descriptive matter" were not entitled to the non-dutiable class.

Tariff item 184, providing for the free admission of quarterly, monthly, and semi-monthly magazines, will not apply to fiction magazines unless they contain a reasonable amount of additional articles, it was announced.

STAFF MAN BUYS STOCK

F. W. Rucker Now Part Owner of Independence (Mo.) Examiner

William Southern, Jr., proprietor of the Independence (Mo.) Examiner, recently transferred to Frank W. Rucker a block of stock of the Examiner Publishing Company which makes Mr. Rucker almost an equal shareholder in that newspaper. Mr. Rucker is vice-president and general manager. Mr. Southern is devoting all of his time to editorial writing.

The paper was started by Mr. Southern in February, 1898. Mr. Rucker joined the Examiner in 1913.

COAST DAILY SOLD

Santa Rosa (Cal.) Republican Now Owned by Press-Democrat

Sale of the Santa Rosa (Cal.) Republican, afternoon paper, owned by G. Lansing Hurd, to Ernest L. Finley, publisher of the Santa Rosa Press-Democrat, morning paper, has been announced.

The price was not disclosed, but was understood to have been in the neighborhood of $100,000. Mr. Finley stated that the evening paper would be continued.

J. W. BAKER TO DIRECT OLEAN (N. Y.) HERALD

Purchase of Paper in Partnership with Frank Gannett Realizes His Youthful Dream of Becoming Its Owner

Acquisition of the Olean (N. Y.) Herald last week by Frank E. Gannett of the Gannett Newspapers and John W. Baker, vice-president and general manager of the Ithaca Journal-News, of the Gannett group, marked the realization of a lifelong dream of Mr. Baker to own the Olean paper.

J. W. Baker

It was on the Olean Herald that Mr. Baker first worked as a full-fledged compositor, after serving his apprenticeship on the Smethport (Pa.) Miner. After working on the Herald Mr. Baker said: "I want to own this paper some day." As co-owner his dream is now realized.

Since he started dreaming, he became associated with Mr. Gannett 15 years ago in the Ithaca enterprise. For the last thirteen years he has been vice-president and general manager of the Ithaca Journal, subsequently the Ithaca Journal-News. The merger came in 1919. Mr. Baker has been made publisher of the Herald.

The paper, nearly 50 years old, was bought from the Olean Herald Company, of which Silas H. Velie has been president for the last two years. The purchase included the real estate as well as the plant. Mr. Baker plans to leave the Ithaca Journal-News as soon as a change can be made in the personnel of that plant and assume entire charge of the Herald.

Mr. Baker was for two years president of the New York Press Association. He is chairman of the education committee of the New York State Publishers Association in which position he has had direct supervision of the Empire State School of Printing and Engraving sponsored by the Association at Ithaca.

Frank E. Gannett began his newspaper career at the bottom of the ladder as a newsboy for one of the papers which he now owns. He worked his way through Cornell University as a campus reporter for the Ithaca Journal-News which he also came later to own.

Plans for immediate additions to the mechanical facilities as well as the personnel of the Herald are being made. New make-up is on the way as well as a reorganization of the entire plant.

A. N. A. APPOINTS MANN

Former Member of Z. L. Potter Agency to be Advertisers' Research Director

Appointment of Walter Mann, formerly head of the market research department of the Z. L. Potter Agency, as research director of the Association of National Advertisers was announced this week by Arthur Ogle, secretary.

Prior to his advertising agency connection, Mr. Mann was connected with the advertising department of the Butterick Publishing Company, advertising manager of House and Garden, and in business for himself as research counsel.

Mr. Mann is author of business articles and of a treatise on time payment selling, issued by the Butterick Publishing Company under the title, "Midas Gold."

The appointment of Mr. Mann follows the recent decisions of the A. N. A. board of directors to expand the research functions of the Association which resulted in the formation of the Research Council.

The function of the research department will be to co-operate with this Council as well as to continue and to expand the work of the A. N. A. headquarters office in making surveys in the various phases of advertising and selling.

AWARDED CONTROL CONTRACT

The Cutler-Hammer Manufacturing Company, Milwaukee, has been awarded the order for the press drives, press control and newspaper conveyors for the new Chicago Daily News building, which is probably one of the largest orders for electrical apparatus ever placed by a newspaper. The equipment in the present Daily News plant was also furnished by Cutler-Hammer.

INSURANCE COMPANY USING NEWSPAPERS

National Campaign by Illinois Bankers Life Association, in American Weekly and Three Dailies Started Sept. 6—Pulling Results

An insurance company has at last captured the spirit of successful department store advertising, and a campaign using smashing headlines and making a bargain offer was started in newspapers Sept. 6 by the Illinois Bankers Life Association of Monmouth, Ill.

Four days after the first copy appeared A. W. Barnes, advertising manager of the company, told Editor & Publisher, he was "already receiving large numbers of applications as a direct result." Mr. Barnes described the drive as "an attempt to determine the practicability of marketing life insurance through newspaper advertising."

"The policy itself is designed to take advantage of the popularity of installment buying and to put life insurance into popular priced packages," Mr. Barnes declared. "So far as we are aware, no other insurance company has attempted to sell life insurance on any large scale direct through newspaper advertising, although it was tried with success in the accident insurance field, in which newspapers have had a part."

The policy advertised, paying benefits on natural death and also on accidental death, is being offered at the flat basis of $1 a month at all ages from 15 to 50. The amount of coverage is graded according to the age at entry, instead of the premiums graded as usual.

Copy in the campaign, which is running in the American Weekly, Kansas City Star and Times, Dallas News, and Oklahoma City Daily Oklahoman and Times, is being prepared largely by the McJunkin Advertising Company. It is notable for its commanding space.

KEEN GIVES LUNCHEON

Robert Scripps and George B. Parker Guests at London Affair

Ed Keen, vice-president and general European manager of the United Press, gave a luncheon on Sept. 14, at the Savoy Hotel in London to Robert P. Scripps, president, and George B. Parker, editorial director, of the Scripps-Howard newspapers.

BELGIUM DECORATES EDITOR AND CRITIC

Ogden Reid of N. Y. Herald Tribune and Royal Cortissoz Honored for Services to Foreign Country at King's Order

Ogden Reid, editor of the New York Herald-Tribune, and Royal Cortissoz, art critic of the paper, were decorated on Sept. 12 by the Belgian government in recognition of their services to Belgium. Mr. Reid received the insignia of Commander of the Order of Leopold II and Mr. Cortissoz that of Knight of the Order of Leopold, the awards being conferred at the offices of the Herald-Tribune by Robert Silvercruys, Belgian Charge d'Affaires at Washington.

The awards were made in the presence of executives of the newspaper, including Mrs. Ogden Reid, Arthur Draper, Geoffrey Parsons, Armistead R. Holcombe, Grafton Wilcox and Mrs. William Brown Meloney.

On presenting the decorations, Mr. Silvercruys said King Albert had requested him to make the awards in appreciation of the services rendered by Mr. Reid and Mr. Cortissoz to Belgium and Belgian art in particular.

DAILY'S EDITORIAL RILES SENATOR

Robinson of Indiana Demands Retraction Within Three Days from Boyd Gurley of Indianapolis Times

(By Telegraph to Editor & Publisher)

Indianapolis, Ind., Sept. 13—Senator Arthur R. Robinson today made public a letter addressed to Boyd Gurley, editor of the Indianapolis Times, demanding within three days a retraction of an editorial asserting Senators James E. Watson and Robinson should resign "because they went into office as beneficiaries of a system which was not known to all the people."

In the letter, which Senator Robinson said was delivered to Gurley the junior senator declared he is speaking only for himself in demanding the retraction as he has not been in communication with Senator Watson, who is a patient at a hospital in Rochester, Minn.

The text of the letter is as follows:

"In a leading editorial published in the Indianapolis Times on Sept. 12, 1927, appears this language:

" 'The machine created in these days of super government is the one which sent Watson and Robinson back to the Senate. Of course, they will not resign. They should, inasmuch as they went into office as beneficiaries of a system which was not known to all the people. They are in the position of receiving office under false pretenses.'

"Senator Watson is ill in the city of Rochester, Minn., and I have not been able to confer with him with reference to this editorial. I can, therefore, speak only for myself. So far as I am concerned, the statement quoted above is absolutely false and grossly libels me. I demand, therefore, that it be retracted within three days from this date, the retraction to be given as much prominence in your newspaper as was given the statement complained of.

"I am making this demand on you and through you on the Indianapolis Times Publishing Company."

Senator Robinson was appointed to the Senate by Governor Jackson to succeed the late Senator Samuel M. Ralston. The appointment was to fill the vacancy until the election of 1926. Last year Senator Robinson was elected for the unexpired term of Senator Ralston.

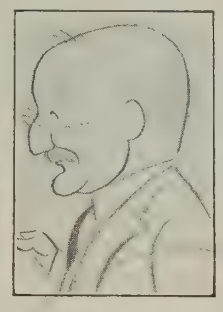
LEAGUE COUNCIL TO STUDY PRESS CENSORSHIP



Adopts Unanimously Resolutions Passed at Conference of Press Experts Favoring Co-operation with Journalists and Opposing Peace Time Control of News

By ALBIN E. JOHNSON
(Geneva Correspondent, EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

Derso, whose caricatures illustrate this article, while little known in the United States, is perhaps the most famous European political cartoonist. He is a Hungarian by birth but has spent much time in Paris, Berlin, Rome and other European capitals and has "lampooned" statesmen at every international conference since Versailles. His best known books—illustrations of prominent events—deal with Versailles, the Dawes Conference, the Locarno Conference and League Council meetings and Assemblies. Derso plans to come to the United States for the 1928 political campaign.

F. T. Birchall, Acting Managing editor, New York Times.

Lord Burnham, Publisher of the London Daily Telegraph and president, International Press Conference.

M. de Naléche, President of the Syndicate de la Press Parisienne.

M. Koenigsberg, President, International News Service.

Karl Bickel, president United Press Associations and Sir Roderick Jones, of Reuters Agency.

ENEVA.—When M. Yanez, of Chile, at a previous Assembly presented a esolution calling for an International ress Conference, little did he realize the xtent of the movement he had started. o disclose a secret, M. Yanez, somewhat ored and wanting to start something that ould give the newspaper men a story to rite (he was a newspaperman himself), nceived the idea of an International ress Conference. The resolution was bmitted. The League, always sensitive public reaction, recoiled from the idea, earing the world press would consider it s an attempt to harness their publicaons into the service of the League.

To make a long story short, the conerence materialized—and passed off with success that exceeded the hopes of veryone connected with it. Also it apears, it started echoes which will reerberate for years to come if the steps aken by the Forty-sixth Council, and the ighth Assembly, now in session, indiate the direction.

Paradoxes are frequent around the League, and the International Press Conerence added its share. The question of peace-time" censorship and "facilities or journalists" were two of the items n the Agenda which caused League Ofcials no little concern. Likewise most f the governmental opposition which ranspired was motivated through fear of hese subjects. All through the Conference itself the "steering" agencies of the League sought to soft-pedal resolutions dealing with censorship.

But the report just submitted to the Council by M. Vandervelde, foreign inister of Belgium, and adopted unaniously by that body, attaches such imortance to censorship that the two resoutions were placed on the agenda of the December session of the Council and repesentations to the different governments vill be made in the meantime. Only the talian delegate indicated opposition to he resolution, and his protest was inudible.

The two resolutions stressed in M. Vandervelde's report, and which occaioned considerable debate in the Assembly Commissions, read as follows:

"Art. VII.—The Conference adopted he following preamble and resolutions:

"The Conference does not ask for the ranting or extension to journalists of ny favor the acceptance of which would ntail the risk of infringing the indefendence of the press or the free judgment of journalists. . . . On the other hand, it strongly urges that all possible facilities should in all circumstances be granted to journalists in pursuit of their calling so that they may fulfill their duties more thoroughly and rapidly in both acquiring and transmitting news."

The Article then deals with press censorship, expulsion of correspondents, double taxation abroad, scholarships, transportation, passport and visa courtesies, equality of treatment, etc.

The other resolution deals strictly with peace time censorship, which is stigmatized as one of the greatest sources of international misunderstanding. It is worth quoting in detail.

"Whereas it is the principal theory and reason for being of this Conference, that the free and prompt interchange between peoples of news of events and conditions makes for mutual understanding and, consequently, peace;

"Whereas it is obvious that news dispatches must, to be effective in this sense, be popularly accepted as true in the countries in which they are published;

"And, whereas the Conference declares itself opposed in principle to every restriction on the liberty of the press, it considers that censorship should not be established or maintained except for really vital reasons and in circumstances which can only be exceptional. Without wishing to interfere in the internal affairs of any state, it nevertheless expresses the general desire to see the reestablishment of normal intellectual communications among the peoples by the rendering milder or suppression of censorship laws wherever the situation permits.

"It is the unanimous conviction of the Conference that censorship in peacetime, whether it is carried on openly or—what is worse—in a disguised form, is a fundamental obstacle to the exchange of international information and as such renders more difficult understandings between nations."

The resolution then asks minimum guarantees which include the censoring of dispatches (where necessary) by trained specialists in news, that journalists be informed of deleted sentences, that dispatches be not delayed, that telegraph tolls on deleted words be reimbursed and that complete equality of facilities and treatment be granted all journalists."

While no specific example was cited, the governments chiefly guilty of the practices which were frowned upon by the Conference, are Italy, Roumania and Russia. Various clashes occurred during the sessions which proved that "international susceptibilities" are far from assuaged.

In a spirit of levity, but with a concealed barb which penetrated the skins of the Roumanian delegates, M. Veszi, editor of the Budapest Pester Lloyd related an incident where the Roumanian censorship against Hungarian newspapers is so strict that even King Ferdinand of Roumania had to get his copies through the diplomatic pouch.

Copies of the Pester Lloyd, regularly subscribed to by the Roumanian legation in Budapest, were dispatched through the mails addressed to "His Majesty, the King of Roumania, the Royal Castle, Bucharest," M. Veszi explained. There came a complaint to the circulation department from the Roumanian Minister accredited to Budapest that His Majesty was not receiving his papers, except sporadically. Investigation showed that they were held up by Roumanian Customs officials and destroyed.

"The surmise that the Roumanian frontier officials wanted to protect their sovereign from the infection caused by the poisonous germs spread in Hungarian newspapers is correct," explained M. Veszi, "but do you suppose that this regulation, the absurdity of which was demonstrated in such conspicuous a manner was cancelled then and there? Not a bit of it. The Roumanians ordered the King's copies sent thereafter through the diplomatic pouch." M. Veszi then declared that there are 14,000,000 Hungarians separated from their mother-land by the Treaty of Trianon who are deprived of news from home—although they live but a few miles away from the border—by censorships of the Succession States.

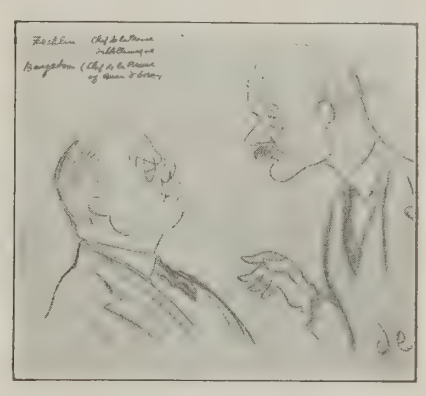
The Roumanian representative, M. Mavrodi, explained the censorship was necessary because the Hungarian newspapers kept alive the Irredentist sentiment of the inhabitants of their former territories.

Incidents of the kind were plentiful.

The resolution sent to the Secretary General of the League, for transmission to the Conference, signed by the former editors of five of the biggest suppressed Italian newspapers, including Avanti, Il Popolo, La Justicia, Il Voce Republicana—papers of the assassinated Matteotti and Ex-Minister Amendola, and the Socialist leaders Turati, Nelli and others who are refugees in France, Switzerland and Belgium—was suppressed for obvious reasons. It was outside the "agenda" according to Lord Burnham, who nevertheless read the resolution and stated, as his private conviction, that if such conditions existed in any country the government which enforced them was doomed to destruction eventually. Other delegates of the Conference likewise had an opportunity of learning of Fascist methods of ruthless suppression of the opposition press, although they did not have to express specifically their views on the subject because of the chairman's ruling.

The action of the League Council on the report, however, and the trend of the Assembly debates, where it was decided that the periodical conferences recommended by the Conference should not only be made feasible but encouraged, showed the importance attached to this previously "toned-down" feature.

Couched in diplomatic language the resolution officially adopted by the Council reads as follows:



"The Council—

"1. Tenders its warmest thanks to the President, Lord Burnham, to all members and experts who have attended the Conference, and to all organizations and persons who assisted in the preparatory work;

"2. Requests the secretary-general to ask the Organization for Communications and Transit to continue with the help of the press groups interested, the technical study of the first group of resolutions adopted (those relating to rates, code telegrams, improvements in communications, the conveyance of newspapers and identity cards for journalists) by the conference of Press Experts;

"3. Adjourns until its December session consideration of the action to be taken on the other resolutions;

"4. Communicates to the Assembly the resolutions of the Conference and requests it to include in the budget of the Organization for Transit and Communications the supplementary credit necessary for the inquiries and other work entailed by these resolutions."

M. Zechlin, press expert of Wilhelmstrasse and M. Bargeton, chef de la presse of Quai d' Orsay—German and French foreign offices, respectively.

HEADS GENEVA WRITERS

Williams, of New York Times, President of League's Journalistic Society

Wythe Williams, Geneva correspondent of the New York Times, has been elected president of the International Association of Journalists accredited to the League of Nations.

In newspaper work since 1905 when he started as a reporter for the Minneapolis Tribune after leaving Ohio Weslyn University, Mr. Williams has at various times been connected with the Milwaukee Journal, Chicago Examiner, Chicago Daily News, New York World, Collier's Weekly, and Saturday Evening Post.

He first went abroad as London correspondent of the World in 1910, transferring to the Times in 1913. During the war he was correspondent with the allied forces from the first day until the last.

PROPRIETARY MEDICINE ADVERTISERS STUDY COPYWRITING THAT SELLS

Homely Words Bring More Results Than Pure English and "Prettified" Layouts, Speaker Declares at New York Convention

A COURSE in "copywriting that sells goods" was given this week to members of the United Medicine Manufacturers of America, holding their annual convention in New York. The lecturer in the "course" was Charles W. Green, M.D., a New York doctor, who writes medical copy for the Wylie B. Jones Advertising Agency, and who formerly wrote copy for the Postoum Company, Inc.

CHARLES W. GREEN, M. D.

At the same convention of the patent medicine manufacturers a tentative advertising campaign "to broaden and defend the market of patent medicines" was discussed by the 50 delegates attending. W. E. Woodward, of the International Druggists' & Chemists' Laboratories, and president of the association, a speaker at the convention, defended the patent medicine industry and answered an attack made on it in "Your Money's Worth," a book recently published.

"We all know that there is some one thing to tie to—some particular appeal of advertising value for each individual product, which once found is the real keynote of success," Dr. Green said. "The repetition of that idea, once it is found, is what makes greater and greater sales.

"If you haven't found that specific appeal with your article (and perhaps you think you have found it when in reality you haven't), be careful in the claims made by your literature. I do not refer particularly to that literature which is a part of the label, but your newspaper advertisements as well; although with the latter greater liberty can be taken, merely because the life of a newspaper advertisement is a short one, and if one does make error, the killing of that particular type of copy is a small matter which does not interfere with business particularly, and unless the case be an aggravated one no great jeopardy is experienced from it.

"Don't forget that you can make truthful statements as strong as false statements. It is the language you use in expressing your claims that most counts.

"There is a knack in copywriting which few copywriters possess. It hinges on old-fashioned expression, homely way of presentation, with not too much regard for perfect English. When you come across a high-brow copywriter who is exceedingly careful to put his appeal in model, correct English, beware of him.

"During a long copy service with the Postum Cereal Company, whose products were proprietary foods having much the same character as proprietary medicines, I frequently used words that were grossly incorrect and some of them weren't even in the dictionary. People understood them, however, and the advertising sold the goods. That was best evidenced by the fact that during a period of 7 years, under a dictation of copy which was wholly mine, a large business, then $5,000,000 gross per annum, was increased to a gross of $22,000,000.

"As regards the use of incorrect English, I dare say the space occupied by punk English phrases used by me would show a cost of $100,000 or $200,000 in a total of some $17,000,000 which it was my pleasure successfully to expend.

"So don't let the wise copy man frighten you off from expressive English, whether it be correct or incorrect according to his ideas. Homely language is the best. Get the message over and make your first sale and with a good product the rest follows, for with that good product comes that most potential of all advertising—the word of recommendation of a satisfied user.

"I am not going to talk much about the abuses of space. Small ads are often more effectual than large ads. The know-how of placing copy is a tremendous thing and very few space-buyers know as much as they should about it.

"This last week I was called in on a case where one of the largest and oldest proprietaries of the country was concerned. A new style of copy had been lately used. It was a compromise between old-time proven reader copy and an effort to pretty that up. I have little patience with such situations and when I was asked to make an analysis as to the reason for a drop in sales, I told the client that it was entirely due to his efforts to beautify his copy.

"There was no other reason and it is a perfectly safe gamble to bet that with an abolition of this attempt to be beautiful in copy appeal and a restoration to old appearance, sales will return with a bound. He is going to do it, and if I could see you three months from now, I could confirm this opinion.

"People care nothing for beauty in an advertisement. They want type and it is amazing how fine the newspaper print is that they will read."

Mr. Woodward called attention to "Your Money's Worth," a recently published book, selected, he said, by the Book-of-the-Month Club for its 40,000 readers, in which is contained a chapter "purporting to be an exposé of package medicines in general."

"It certainly is a violent denunciation of them," Mr. Woodward said, "based on data principally obtained from the ancient and obsolete and undoubtedly biased archives of the American Medical Association." A part of the chapter, quoted in Mr. Woodward's report, follows:

"The domain of the modern medicine man is not so much a wonderland as a rotting miasmal swamp. It touches the uttermost limits of human degradation. For those who trade for profit on the hope and despair of the sick and ailing—who deliberately throw stones at those floundering in pain and anguish—no stricture, no contempt is too great. They, above all others, are the vultures of modern civilization."

In his defense of the manufacturers, Mr. Woodward said he knew of no industry "that is so restricted and hemmed in by Governmental regulations and requirements as is ours, and none that is so constantly being combated by such powerful, well-organized and well-financed foes.

"I am sure there is not a man nor a member of our association, nor, indeed, scarcely a package medicine manufacturer in the country, who does not regard his business as entirely honest and legitimate in every way and himself as a self-respecting citizen serving humanity in general quite as fully as does the manufacturer of cotton thread or washing machines."

James F. Pickett, Secretary of the manufacturers' association, delared that "the avenues of distribution of ready package medicine must be kept open, and unreasonable restrictions must not be placed on our merchandise. We resent the action of retail pharmacists in attempting by legislation to restrict the sale of our products to registered pharmacists only."

Dr. Green also defended proprietaries in his address.

"There is an important feature concerning proprietaries in general which some of us are apt to overlook. That is their actual need in the current condition of human affairs. Leaving aside the well-known fact to which all medicine caters—the fact that humanity loves to diagnose and treat its own ills—we must keep in mind that there are literally millions of people to whom a doctor is not readily accessible and were it not for proprietary medicines, a great deal of actual suffering would result.

"The proprietary of necessity has taken the place of the old roots and herbs which hung in the long-ago kitchen or cupboard, ready for use for each and every ill to which mankind is heir. Nothing has taken the place of these except proprietary medicines and the government takes a broad view of that situation and isn't such a terribly wicked and browbeating government as some people sometimes think.

"With a good preparation, fitted to a real human need, the proprietor of such an article is 100 per cent safe, if he hedges himself about with proper precaution, for the government is sometimes wrong and when the government is wrong all its forces cannot make that wrong a right.

"Furthermore, you will find that the government is quick to mend the error of any too officious executive, once it is proved that executive is wrong. Therefore, the proper way to deal with government bureaus is in straightforward man-to-man fashion, correcting faults if they exist and defending one's self when one knows he is right."

ATTENTION TO ARTISTIC DETAILS BROUGHT SUCCESS TO BRITISH ADVERTISING SHOW

Booth of Sir Charles Higham, president of Charles F. Higham, Ltd., London advertising agency, at British Advertising Exhibition. The booth is typical of the other booths in construction and shows the artistic effect attained by the architect who designed the show.

THE recent British Advertising Exhibition held at Olympia, near London, attained a success far beyond the expectations of its backers, according to Barrington Hooper, joint managing director of Industrial Newspapers, Ltd., London. The exhibition attracted more than 200,000 paid admissions and showed a profit of $50,000.

In a letter to EDITOR & PUBLISHER Mr. Hooper said primary credit for the success of the undertaking must be given the architect, who planned the booths and the decorations for Olympia Hall.

"From the moment one entered the Hall it was felt that something new was being looked at," Mr. Hooper wrote.

The scrambled haphazard effect which characterizes many exhibits was conspicuously lacking.

A. A. A. A. IS FINDING WORK FOR JOBLESS

Average of Two People Placed in Advertising Positions Every Day, Says James O'Shaughnessy, Association Secretary

In New York a free employment agency is now placing an average of two people a day in lucrative advertising positions. It is the Clearing House of the American Association of Advertising Agencies, and James O'Shaughnessy, secretary, this week estimated for EDITOR & PUBLISHER that in the nine years the "house" has been in operation nearly 5,000 men and women have been furnished with jobs.

"These jobs have ranged from the ownership of an agency to the third assistant checking clerk of an advertising company," Mr. O'Shaughnessy said. "A job we fill frequently is that of managing director of associations.

"If a person has training and experience in advertising agency work, he is easily placed, we find; but the trouble is that a large number of the applicants don't know what it is all about.

"For a long time young college boy graduates caused us no end of trouble. They wanted to write the back page advertisements on the Saturday Evening Post their first day on the job. We took it up with college authorities and now the men with their brand new degrees do not expect to become copy wizards immediately.

"College men get the preference even though they are top-lofty in their expectations. College is good training for any kind of work. The most desirable experience we find is that of newspaper reporting.

"Poets made good copywriters and we have found jobs for a number of celebrated workers in this field. Because they are schooled in condensation and precision, poets usually write beautiful advertising copy. An agency doesn't employ a poet's imagination, but it does engage his exactitude of phrasing.

"Salaries of the various positions we fill here vary considerably. We find it is easier to place a $15,000 a year man than one accustomed to making $5,000 a year. Skill is desired in the advertising business and advertising men will pay big money to skill."

Mr. O'Shaugnessy declared his clearing house was very strict against liquor drinkers.

"A man can't drink and work for an advertising agency these days," he said.

PACIFIC FLIGHTS TESTED HAWAIIAN NEWS MEN

taffs Worked Night and Day Under Difficulties to Report Aviators' Successes and Disasters—Checking Rescue Rumors a Huge Task

(Special to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

IONOLULU, HAWAII, Aug. 24.—Any newspaperman who thinks that e in the "South Seas" is leisurely and ft ought to be on the "receiving end" a trans-Pacific flight.

That's where we newspapermen of onolulu, Hilo and other points in mid-acific have been for the past few weeks, d we rise to remark that our brethren no covered Lindbergh, Chamberlin, yrd and the rest of them on the East ast had a fairly simple time of it com-red to the job which was thrust upon .

Also, to our fellow-newspapermen of e West coast, who started a flock of ers out toward the setting sun, we use to assert that sending off the avia-rs is one little thing but keeping track their progress over the Pacific, and vering them if and when they land, is ite another.

This city and this outpost territory have d three distinct "flights" since late ne. Also, an attempted flight from awaii to the Pacific coast that flopped, d an attempted flight from the Coast Hawaii that failed, with probable agedy.

We can blame part of it on "Lucky" ndbergh, and the glamour with which u newspapermen of the States sur-unded his achievement.

Consider, for an instant, a bit of ography. Hawaii is a tiny speck on a ther large and spacious ocean none too ickly covered with islands and mighty inly speckled with ships.

Lindbergh, Byrd and the rest of the ans-Atlantic fliers had a continent to oot at. The chaps trying their wings er the Pacific were compelled to stick a course so narrow that if they were it a fraction of a degree early in the ght, and didn't get back on, they'd obably sail clear past Hawaii and on t into the boundless ocean spaces.

That is, the speck which is Hawaii oks mighty small from the Pacific ast viewpoint. "Covering" that speck, r the arrival of a flier, is another thing ain.

It's 330 miles from the northwest to the utheast tips of the main Hawaiian ands—Kauai on the north, Hawaii on e south. In this stretch there are vast ckless spaces of mountain, jungle and evasse. There are some sizable lava serts. There are wild forests.

There is plenty of rough coast-line, ere cliffs called "palis" tower hundreds feet above the crashing surf.

The largest mountain-mass on Ameri-n soil is in Hawaii, Mauna Loa, which casionlly cuts lose with first-page ption stuff.

The channels between the islands are ywhere from 25 to 50 miles of tossing ater.

Over much of this expanse of archi-lago communication is meager. Many lated villages, tiny hamlets—are not t linked up by telephone.

There is a good telephone system on ch main island but it can't cover the untain and the jungle where a spent ne might fall, or the miles of lonely re where a drifting plane might land. en there's a far larger area where nes in trouble might be rescued. This ludes the shoals, islets, rocks and fs around the Hawaiian archipelago—a ittle matter of a stretch of 1,530 miles, ughly north to south.

The only way to cover this expanse sely is by vessel—steamer, submarine, ooner or fishing-sampan.

Consider, too, that the resources of awaii's newspapers to cover the arrival trans-ocean fliers are not exactly those New York, Paris, London or San ancisco. Staffs are comparatively all, facilities far less complete.

The press associations all have corre-ndents here. The Associated Press

headquarters are in the office of the Honolulu Star-Bulletin; the United Press has headquarters at the office of the Honolulu Advertiser. The International News Service has a correspondent here, and many of the big mainland papers have special correspondents. Most of the latter are on the staffs of the two Honolulu dailies, the Star-Bulletin (evening); and the Advertiser (morning.)

All of the flights from the Pacific Coast were scheduled to end at Wheeler field, island of Oahu. This is the army's most accessible flying field in Hawaii. A single highway, well-paved but winding and at times narrow, with deep gulches and abrupt turns, connects Wheeler field with Oahu.

By arrangement with the army, which did everything possible for the press, Honolulu newspapers and the press associations arranged rapid-fire connections between Wheeler field and Honolulu. The Star-Bulletin and the Associated Press for instance, put in a direct telephone line, open all the time, and a direct telegraph line.

"Flashes," bulletins, leads and running stories were sent by telegraph from Wheeler field to Honolulu and instantly transmitted to the office of the Radio Corporation of America, thence being shot to the mainland.

Hangars at the field were transformed into field offices for the newspapers, with wires, typewriters, automobile service, and even airplane service. The army put airplanes into service to carry films from the field to Fort Shafter, army headquarters in the outskirts of Honolulu. There the films were picked up and rushed by automobile to the newspaper offices.

Well, the first flight we had to cover was that of the army lieutenants, Lester J. Maitland and Albert F. Hegenberger, in their big army Fokker-built plane. They hopped off from Oakland June 28 and arrived here at dawn June 29. Thanks to thorough preparation and the efficiency of their machine, they gave the newspapermen comparatively little trouble. They started, they kept on coming, they arrived about on expected time, and the big story was covered and over. It meant a sleepless night for all newspapermen and staffs, a rush of extras, a large volume of cable and wireless stuff to get off, the dash for pictures, and all the rest of the phases of covering a big story for ourselves and our mainland associations and connections.

But there was nothing particularly unexpected about the Maitland-Hegenberger flight, and advance plans were mostly carried through.

We had a taste at that time that the world was anxiously waiting for news and pictures of the fliers; and a wave of requests for wireless, cable and mail stories, and for pictures. The requests came from newspapers and picture companies not represented here by their special men. But this wave was like a rivulet alongside the Mississippi flood compared to the deluge later when the big stories of disaster to fliers began breaking.

While the army men were getting ready to hop from the coast, Dick Grace, stunt aviator from Hollywood, arrived here by steamer carrying two things—a plane and a great idea. The idea was to fly from Hawaii back to the coast and reap the reward that air heros are getting now in large chunks.

It was a good idea, for Grace and his backers, but not for hard-working newspapermen.

To begin with, Grace's plans were surrounded by a thick wall of secrecy. It didn't seem to be his fault, but every effort was made to keep newspapermen and news agencies from learning what was going on, and particularly from getting pictures. He was taken to the naval station here and preparation for his flight was made at the naval air station, which is on a well-guarded island in the middle of Pearl Harbor. There he made his plane ready to go to the island of Kauai, a short flight away, where was the only runway long enough for a plane to get into the air loaded with enough gasoline for a trans-Pacific flight.

You brethren of the newspaper profession don't need to be told that not only did we get the news of what was going on at Pearl Harbor but pictures also. How we did it will be revealed some day in Marlen Pew's entertaining "Shop Talk At Thirty"—but not just now, no, not just now. We might want to get out some other news and pictures.

Grace and his immediate entourage went from Pearl Harbor to the island of Kauai and set up shop in a wide, sandy stretch of country along the seashore known as "Barking Sands." And, always under the urge of backers who wanted the young aviator to get going before Maitland and Hegenberger had all the glory, Grace tried it early on the morning of July 4 and crashed into the brush, lucky to get down without killing himself.

But meanwhile he'd given us a lot more sleepless nights. Newspapers and news associations had to send representatives out to Barking Sands to watch for the takeoff and to chronicle the preparations. They were on the job more than a week, day and night, much of it sleeping in the sand—or trying to, and it was a tough job. It was finished when Grace cracked up in the trees—his plane damaged beyond all hope of repair.

The next flight was that of Ernie Smith, air mail carrier, and Emory Bronte. These young men had tried to beat the army fliers to it and take off from Oakland in late June but various things prevented it.

They finally hopped from Oakland airport July 14, came along nicely until about six or seven hundred miles off Hawaii. Then, about four in the morning, they flashed by radio the statement, afterward so much questioned, that they were out of gasoline and coming down in the sea.

Then followed a terrific seven hours until they were found—found in the famous kiawe tree on the shore of the island of Molokai.

From Molokai they were picked up in army planes and brought to Wheeler field, Oahu.

To reach them on Molokai required herculean efforts. To get the pictures and the news back to Honolulu required more. And all the while wireless and cable messages were pouring in from mainland newspaper and news association offices. That story was about cleaned up by the night of July 15.

Next on the list of tasks and troubles was the Dole flight, whose tension is not yet over, inasmuch as, at this writing, three planes are missing on the Pacific (probably lost) and with them six men and a girl.

Four planes hopped off from Oakland airport last Tuesday, August 16, and two landed the next day. The two which came through were piloted by Art Goebel and Martin Jensen.

The other two planes were the Miss Doran (with two men and a Michigan girl, Mildred Doran, aboard) and the Golden Eagle, the plane entered by George Hearst, publisher of the San Francisco Examiner, piloted by Jack Frost.

Their loss created, in addition to the expected rush of emergency work, a literally incredible volume of rumors and reports to be run down.

Literally hundreds of reports of this plane being seen drifting at sea, that plane being spotted falling into the mountains poured in on Honolulu newspapers and news agencies for three days, Aug. 17, 18, 19. And for days afterward wild reports continued, though in dwindling number. Even today at least a dozen such rumors have been heard, and are being investigated.

The trouble of it is that almost any such report might be true. Circumstantial statements backed by alleged witnesses were given Honolulu newspapers about a plane being seen falling into the sea off Waikiki beach; people telephoned that they had seen a plane dropping headlong into a great reservoir back of the city of Honolulu; flares at night, signal smokes; glitter of the sunlight of drifting wreckage; all such things were reported, and all had to be run down.

Few newspapermen got more than a wink or two of sleep in Honolulu for three nights, and none in the daytime. Newspaper plants ran on a 24-hour schedule, ready to issue extras at any time.

In the midst of this rush, Capt. William P. Erwin, with Gordon Scott as navigator, hopped off from Oakland airport for Oahu on a second attempt. He had been one of the original Dole flight entrants, but an accident just after the start had caused him to turn back. Now, on Aug. 19, he tried again—and is still missing.

Erwin's navigator sent out a frantic wireless call late Friday evening, when they were only a few hundred miles off the California coast, indicating that the plane was in a tailspin, its second such difficulty within a few minutes. Then silence—and another long watch for the newspapers and corespondents.

Another rush of messages from the mainland, too, ordering special stories and pictures. Another deluge of queries

ADAMS AND GURLEY TRIUMPH AS INDIANA GOVERNOR IS INDICTED

Vincennes and Indianapolis Editors Have Waged Long Fight Against Corruption—Governor's Aides Also to Be Tried

By RICHARD P. OVERMYER

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Sept. 12.—Climaxing eleven months of grand jury investigations started after charges of political corruption were made by one Indiana newspaper editor and were relentlessly pressed by another, the Governor of Indiana and two of his close political allies were indicted by the Marion county grand jury Friday, Sept. 9, on a charge of conspiracy to bribe and the mayor of Indianapolis was indicted for violation of the corrupt practices act.

Boyd Gurley

Governor Ed Jackson, George V. Coffin, chairman of the Marion county and Indianapolis city Republican central committees, and Robert I. Marsh, attorney for the Ku Klux Klan and former law partner of the Governor, will be arraigned Monday, Oct. 3, in Criminal Court to plead to the charge of offering Warren T. McCray, Governor in 1923, $10,000 and a promise of immunity from prosecution if he would appoint James E. McDonald prosecutor of Marion county instead of William H. Remy. McCray refused the offer and was shortly convicted of using the mails to defraud and sentenced to ten years in the Federal penitentiary at Atlanta, Ga. He was paroled Aug. 17 after serving three years and four months of his sentence.

Mayor John L. Duvall went on trial this morning in the Criminal Court on another charge of violating the corrupt practices act, filed in an affidavit several months ago by Prosecutor Remy and his special assistants, Emsley W. Johnson and John W. Holtzman. Seven affidavits were filed against Duvall at the same time, one of them charging he had failed to list a $10,000 campaign contribution. The one on which he is being tried now specifically charges him with having promised William H. Freeman a place on the board of public works before election, and William H. Armitage the privilege of naming two members of the board of works and of choosing the city civil engineer.

Examination of 29 men, eighteen of whom were excused, failed to bring about selection of a jury in the case today, and Special Judge Cassius C. Shirley ordered the drawing of 50 more veniremen.

The indictments returned last Friday by the grand jury are declared by many to have been the direct result of a copyrighted story printed in the Indianapolis Times some weeks ago which deliberately charged Governor Jackson with offering McCray the bribe. Jackson was secretary of state in 1923 when McCray was Governor. When the story appeared Jackson refused to comment but last week he wrote a letter to Boyd Gurley, editor of the Times, denying the charge.

Gurley, who has been tireless in his editorial advocacy of the long probe, immediately replied in a letter demanding that Jackson appear before the grand jury. Jackson did not appear, but two days later the indictments were returned. Gurley was before the grand jury two weeks ago, and although Coffin and Marsh were not involved in his original story in the Times, it is thought he expanded on details of the alleged bribery conspiracy before the grand jury.

Although return of the indictments marks the climax in the long investigation, it does not mark the end, according to an announcement from the grand jury foreman and word from prosecuting officials.

The indictments brought a flood of editorial comment from all parts of the country deploring the state's political ills of the last three years and applauding the efforts to clean house.

Thomas H. Adams, whose charges of corruption really started the probe, on Saturday, September 10, demanded wholesale resignations of Republican party leaders and several officeholders.

Mr. Adams, commenting editorially on the indictments, said, in part:

"Maybe a touch of clean government has reached first call in Indiana after a year of the most wretched criminality and conspiracy that ever affected a state.

"In the indictments of Jackson, Duvall and Coffin the crust of the big conspiracy has been touched.

"This newspaper has warned from the start that the fabric of state and federal government was terribly involved.

"We center again the mind on two grand juries fixed in that Marion county courthouse. The whole corrupt political machine is involved.

"I faced this battle alone for days. Sparse support was given me by the press, pulpit or people. I charged criminal conspiracy against the highway commission and drove the indictments to silence.

"We do not rejoice in the downfall of any man, but there is to be a beginning of a new day in Indiana. The back of the rule of lawbreaking is broken. There are far worse offenses than the present indictments yet to be exposed. The political parasites are through."

Thomas H. Adams, editor of the Vincennes Commercial, broadcast the charges that started the investigation in October, 1926. He made them on the basis of a note smuggled from the Indiana state prison by D. C. Stephenson, former head of the Ku Klux Klan in Indiana who is serving life sentence for the murder of Miss Madge Oberholtzer of Indianapolis.

Adams' charges rocked the state and were given great space in the press from coast to coast. The grand jury was instructed to investigate, but after eleven weeks of probing, during which time more than two hundred witnesses were examined, a no-indictment report was returned on Dec. 27.

The present grand jury, the third, after disposing of routine business, last month turned its attention to the political corruption charges. Since the beginning of its probe, charges have flown thick and fast. Letters and documents purporting to have come from Stephenson and tending to show his connection with various political leaders were published by the Times. One of the documents published was said to be a check for $2,500 from Stephenson to Governor Jackson. After a long silence, Jackson said the check was given in exchange for a saddle-horse he sold the ex-Klan leader. Stephenson, it is said, declared the check was part payment of campaign expenses.

Various other letters, documents, checks and lists of campaign contributions, supposed to have come from Stephenson, were printed by the Times and involved scores of men in state and local public office.

Governor Jackson, Mr. Coffin and Mr. Marsh will be in court on the regular arraignment day, the first Monday of the month, and will be accorded the same treatment as all others under indictment, according to Judge James A. Collins of Criminal court. It was reported today that ex-Governor McCray, who is living here with his family since his parole last month, will be summoned to testify against Jackson.

COOLIDGE AS COPY CREATOR

President Averaged 1,000 Words a Day While at Summer White House

President Coolidge worked and played at the Summer White House at Rapid City at a rate of 1,000 words a day in each newspaper of the nation, according to an estimate made by a New York Times editorial writer this week.

The estimate was based on the fact that during the President's 87 days in the Black Hills and adjacent parts the telegraph instruments clicked off more than 2,100,000 words of news about him. This comes to approximately 25,000 words a day, and the editorial writer divides the figure by the 25 press association men and special writers covering Coolidge to arrive at his 1,000 words a day average.

The editorial warned "the impetuous reader" against rushing into print with the "indignant query whether any man in history has been deserving of 25,000 words of daily publicity over a period of nearly three months."

WHO, WHAT AND WHY? AT BIG FIGHT

Hosts of News Writers Gathering in Chicago for Dempsey-Tunney Battle of Three Millions—Menke, Chief Ghost Writer Ready

"Great minds of the pen and typewriter will be in at the death," Davis J. Walsh, sports writer for International News Service, reported to Editor & Publisher this week, furnishing an advance account of how the Dempsey-Tunney "Battle of Three Millions" will be covered in Chicago, Sept. 22.

"Among those at the ringside who will labor far into the night," he wrote, and he himself will be there, "will be Irvin Cobb; Tom Mix; W. O. McGeehan, New York Herald Tribune; Jack Sharkey; Grantland Rice; Jack Kearns; and Louella Parsons of the New York American; but why continue?

"All the literati will be there, painting the lily and splitting the infinitive with equal abandon. Even the two principals of the evening locked in the throes of their deathless strife, will not neglect their readers. Dempsey is being advertised as ready to write a very learned piece on the outcome of the fight, and Tunney, the man of few words but big ones, is training to beat him at this game.

"Meanwhile, Frank Menke, president of the Ghost Writers Union, is preparing to spend the evening writing masterpieces.

"Powerful stories will be committed to posterity by Benny Leonard, the New York World's expert, James J. Corbett, Louis Fink and Frank Moran.

"Among others whose strained, alert faces will be seen at the ringside will be: Harry Cross, Don Skene, and Ishbel Ross, New York Herald Tribune; Ray Campbell, Ed Bang and George Carleton, Cleveland News; Richard Vidmer, John Kieran, James Harrison, James P. Dawson and Frank Daly, New York Times; Hype Igo, Vincent Treanor, Ed. NEW YORK STATE NEWSPAPERS OPPOSE SPECIAL EDITIONS AND AD STUNTS

Speakers at Advertising Departmental Favor Selling Merchants Campaigns Instead of the One-Time Idea— Speidell Heads Group

SPECIAL editions and stunt pages are losing favor with publishers as a method of increasing newspaper linage, according to several executives attending the convention of the Advertising Departmental of the New York State Publishers Association, held at Jamestown Sept. 12 and 13. With the stunt page regarded by many advertisers as a "hold-up," and often an unprofitable and inconvenient addition to the newspaper operation, the advertising managers are devoting their principal efforts to making regular advertisers of the local merchants formerly regarded as stunt prospects.

L. G. Speidell, Mount Vernon (N. Y.) Argus, was elected president of the group. Mr. Speidell this week completed his 25th year in newspaper work.

M. K. Miller of the Batavia News was named vice-president and R. C. Harris, Utica Press, secretary and treasurer.

Service to national advertisers along lines which few small city dailies have developed was outlined by M. Bradley Norton, advertising manager of the Niagara Falls Gazette, who also expressed himself strongly in favor of selling local merchants the campaign rather than the special one-time idea.

Mr. Norton told the score or more advertising managers at the meeting how his newspaper had gained more than 70 new advertising accounts, with an increase of 31.4 per cent in national advertising during a period when many newspapers were losing business or having difficulty in maintaining past records.

The Gazette, he said, had employed a young college graduate at a salary of $32.50 per week for the sole purpose of making contact with retailers and jobbers in Niagara Falls and the Buffalo district. This man sells no space, but keeps in constant touch with the retail market, learning what is in the minds of the men through whom nationally advertised goods reach the public and instilling a friendly feeling toward the Gazette as a medium for the nationally advertised goods they handle.

Part of his work was represented in what Mr. Norton called an inventory of the drug and grocery markets, showing the distribution of nationally advertised merchandise by products and the rank of the respective products in volume of sales. Similar surveys were made of the cigar trade. The calls on the drug and grocery trades covered about one-third of the total number of stores and the cigar survey was the result of calls on 100 of the various cigar outlets, selection being made with a view to giving a true picture of all the city's districts.

These surveys were embodied in attractively printed booklets, the cover of which was a front-page of the Gazette carrying a banner line on an increase in the city's population following the annexation of two suburban areas with an airplane picture of the city and the falls imposed on the printed page. The latest survey, covering in four pages the coffee distribution situation in the city, was highly commended for completeness, accuracy and brevity by one manufacturer, Mr. Norton said, and brought two new coffee accounts to the paper.

Another development of the service was an agreement between the local druggists and the Gazette by which the former agreed to display and stock articles advertised in the newspaper. The Gazette, as recently described in EDITOR & PUBLISHER, has also organized the Niagara Falls Grocers' Association, combatting the chain stores with a chain of independents using regular space in the newspaper and giving special display to goods so advertised. A dozen new national food accounts have resulted from these efforts, Mr. Norton declared.

Grocery route lists are issued every three months for eight districts of the city and are kept up to date daily with the help of the local food inspector, sealer of weights and measures, and health inspectors, who are furnished postcards by the Gazette for the reporting of changes in the location and management of the food stores.

The Niagara Falls Gazette Advertiser is issued monthly, giving the dates of all national campaigns scheduled for the Gazette, announcements of new deals, new products, new distributors, etc. Puffs are kept out of its columns by strict editorial supervision. The Gazette advertising department will not dress windows, nor sell goods, but it offers to check window displays within the city limits, and to display nationally advertised goods in its office window. It will send our broadsides if the advertiser pays the cost of printing and postage, but prefers to give space to describing the campaign in the Advertiser.

This has been accomplished, Mr. Norton said, with the addition of only the contact man at $32.50 (later $30) per week and a promotion printing and postage bill of $900. The paper has its own job plant, but the advertising department is charged for all work at commercial rates.

A. W. Fell, of Williamsport, Pa., manager of the Pennsylvania Newspaper Publishers Association, endorsed Mr. Norton's views and urged the advertising managers to avoid mere production of linage by special pages, which, he said, were often legitimate, but more often overdone. Help the local advertiser to make his use of space more effective, he advised, by getting a close acquaintance with the merchandising problems of all lines and being able to render expert consultation service.

Transformation stunts into regular space was also the theme of B. LeRoy Woodbury, advertising manager of the Worcester (Mass.) Telegram-Gazette. When the publisher requested that linage reports be furnished him with special stunt linage separated from regular business, the advertising staff undertook the task of creating new regular advertisers.

Promotion of the paper's own columns to its readers as a medium for advertising was first undertaken, followed by promotion directed to retailers of shoes, apparel and furniture. The paper's promotion was directed in its own columns to the attention of the small advertiser and prospects.

The staff was then sent out to get fixed-space contracts. As a good part of their business had been on special efforts, with resultant large commissions that would no longer be payable with the abandonment of special pages, the paper proposed a bonus for new contract business. A total of $500 was made available, with prizes of $100, $75, and $50 for the solicitors making the best record in number of contracts and volume of business and the remainder being apportioned on a point system. Fifteen men qualified for prizes, after the three top rewards had been given out. More than 200 fixed space contracts were obtained ranging from 50 inches to 2,500 inches and many of them from new advertisers.

Special rate inducements were held out for the fixed-space contracts. An advertiser who agreed to use four inches once a week for six months was given the equivalent of the paper's 1,500-inch rate. For 4 inches twice a week for 52 weeks, the rate earned was the equivalent of the 2,000-inch rate. The advertiser who contracted for a minimum of four inches 4 times a week for a year earned the same rate accorded to the department stores.

Instructions in preparation of copy for small advertisers were given to the staff and special positions were created by changing the make-up from a right-hand pyramid to a pyramid from both sides of the page toward the centre. Large advertisements were placed at the bottom, with small copy on top at both sides of the page, leaving the top centre of the page clear for news display. Only 12 cancellations have been received in nine months and the majority of these were cancelled by order of the newspaper's credit department.

In a general discussion which followed Mr. Woodbury's paper, one advertising manager brought out the experience of a local firm which had formerly advertised heavily on Friday and Saturday and now spread his copy throughout the week. His sales were ahead of former records, but the week-end business, which had formerly been the week's highest, was now behind the old records, indicating a direct connection between sales and linage.

Mr. Woodbury in answer to a question, stated that his paper had overcome the "week-end traffic jam" of national copy by refusing position except when the advertiser gave the publisher the option of inserting the copy on one of several days when local copy was not so heavy as on Friday.

The discussion also brought out that tie-up advertising in which copy of local dealers was published in conjunction with that of a national advertiser was not resulting happily for the newspapers. One manager reported that he had obtained for the Perfection Stove Company last year a volume of local tie-up copy several times in excess of the amount on the national account and that his reward had been this year a drastic reduction in the size of the national copy. Other managers reported that they were refusing to solicit local copy to tie up with current magazine advertisements, the principal object of the tie-up being to call attention to the magazine.

Use of automobiles by solicitors was the subject of several speakers' remarks from the floor. One manager, whose force had formerly been supplied with office cars, which they kept at home and used for personal as well as office service, found that the expense was inordinate.

The office car which had been delegated to him showed an unkeep cost in excess of $1,000 for a year, he stated, and the discovery had changed the system. The office now allows each solicitor $60 per month for the use of his own car, except when weather conditions do not permit its employment, and then the office defrays his expense for other transportation means.

William H. Rankin of the William H. Rankin Advertising Agency, one of the speakers, praised the newspaper as a medium, saying:

"Advertising in the daily newspaper at present rates is the most economical way to reach every member of the home. There is no other advertising medium that has such possibilities for increasing sales."

C. H. Waterbury, sales manager of Lehn & Fink, Inc., spoke on the Lysol anti-substitution campaign.

CRITICS RETURN FROM ABROAD

William F. McDermott, dramatic editor, and James H. Rogers, music critic, of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, have returned from their annual all-summer pilgrimage to the music and theatrical centers of Europe.

Advertising in the Florida Times-Union Helped Make Cohen Brothers

"The Big Store"

SIXTY-FIVE years ago Cohen Brothers established "The Big Store" in Jacksonville. In 1910 they built the St. James Building, the largest retail store building in the city.

Since then their business has so rapidly increased that in the past year they have again greatly increased their floor space.

Throughout its history "The Big Store" has advertised consistently in the Florida Times-Union. Here is what its General Manager says of this publication:

"We rely to a great extent upon this (Times-Union) advertising to carry the message of 'The Big Store' to persons who live in Jacksonville's trading territory.

"In addition to local patrons we find that such advertising brings us thousands of mail-order customers living outside of this city."

Such testimony from Jacksonville's largest department store is convincing evidence of the leadership of Florida's largest newspaper:

The Florida Times-Union
JACKSONVILLE, FLA.

Leader in advertising volume

Leader in quality of advertising carefully censored

Leader in volume of quality circulation in the leading market of the world

IN EIGHT MONTHS this year The New York Times published 18,825,590 agate lines of advertising, 6,792,392 lines more than any other New York newspaper. In August The Times printed a total volume of 1,920,182 agate lines, 738,978 lines more than any other newspaper.

Special attention is called not so much to the volume as to the quality of The Times censored advertising. The Times advertising columns are trustworthy, dependable, because The Times censorship excludes whatever is false or misleading.

The Times net paid sale is now at the highest point in its history. The average sale of the daily edition exceeds 390,000 copies; of the Sunday edition, the sale exceeds 650,000 copies. The gain over this time last year, daily, averages more than 35,000 copies, Sundays, 80,000 copies.

No such number of intelligent, thinking readers has ever been assembled by any other newspaper in the world.

The New York Times.

MEN RESPONSIVE TO HUMAN INTERESTS WRITE STORIES THAT SELL PAPERS

This Is Conclusion of Joseph Mulcahy, New York Evening Journal, Who Condemns "Hard-Boiled Reporters"—Big Headlines Defended as Accommodation to Readers

By PHILIP SCHUYLER

EDITORIAL efficiency and prestige, screaming headlines, mechanical equipment, distribution facilities, the weather and many another detail contribute to the successful business of selling newspapers, but to Joseph Mulcahy, managing editor of the New York Evening Journal, nothing counts quite so much as the "human interest" which a reporter does or does not get into a story.

"You can't define human interest, in spite of what the schools of journalism and their professors say," Mr. Mulcahy declared this week. "But it certainly is in every story that sells a paper and, just as important, it is in the man who writes the story.

"It is a story that Tom, Dick and Harry will read; a story that aroused the man who wrote it. There's stuff that interests every human being in virtually every news story that breaks. The trouble is that our writers become newspaper men, hardboiled and cynical, and forget they are human beings. They fail to respond to stories. Nothing spoils a good story so quickly as the hard-boiled attitude.

"Of course we don't want to lose all our cynicism. We don't want our reporters to think that the birth of a daughter is news because an important advertiser is concerned. We don't want our papers over-written. Still it is true that when an editorial and news writing staff is responsive, easily aroused by human actions, a paper will be produced which will outclass its stodgy, cold rival, that is utterly devoid of human interest."

Mr. Mulcahy has been 30 years in newspaper work. Most of that time he has spent on Hearst newspapers in New York and Detroit where the order has been for volume circulation. Newspapers on which he has worked under the direction of Arthur Brisbane have been extraordinarily good circulation getters. When Mr. Brisbane bought the Detroit Times, for instance, that paper had a book circulation of 26,000 and an actual circulation of something like 12,000. Mr. Brisbane had bought at a receiver's sale. Mr. Mulcahy was made managing editor. In three months time orders were being rushed for a new press. The circulation had climbed to 75,000.

Reporters who could see and write down human interest, coupled with big headlines to tell it to the people, were responsible for this newspaper success, according to Mr. Mulcahy.

He gave this definition of a successful reporter:

"The successful reporter knows no fear. He is not a braggart; but he is confident and a little cocky. He knows when he is right and how far he can go. He always gets the truth and tells the truth in his stories. Above all he sticks to facts, and doesn't let his imagination run away with him."

The greatest human interest stories reporters have written in some time, and therefore the stories that have sold more newspapers have been the Lindbergh flight and the death of Valentino.

When Lindbergh landed in Paris on May 21 the Evening Journal sold 850,000 copies at 5 cents a copy. It was a Saturday and the Journal carried a color section. The order had been given for the printing of about 740,000 of the color sections. The circulation over this figure was without this special supplement and bought simply for the Lindbergh news.

Mr. Mulcahy, anxious to be first with the Lindbergh story, got out early with what editors of other New York newspapers called a faked story which landed the aviator in France away ahead of actuality. The fact was that the Journal's story was not true, but the Journal claims it was not issued as a counterfeit or an attempt to deceive. Mr. Mulcahy relied on Naval Communications. Located at the battery in New York, Naval Communications picks up the radio chatter of ships at sea and land stations. While the officials in charge won't give out the text of the messages they tap in this way, they will give out to newspapers the context.

At 10:30 Saturday morning of May 21, when a Journal reporter called up Naval Communications he was told that a message had been intercepted which placed Lindbergh over Valentia, Ireland. Two hours later news services carried the same tidings. At 1:30 in the afternoon Naval Communications reported that Lindbergh was within sight of Paris. The Journal had a "flash" page all ready and Mulcahy ordered it released. Thus the Journal had Lindbergh in Paris four hours before the wheels of the Spirit of St. Louis actually touched the ground at Le Bourget.

For the first hour, Mr. Mulcahy thought he had a beat. As time passed he realized Naval Communications had gone back on him. Luck was with the Journal, however. If Lindbergh had crashed, that 850,000 circulation might not have helped the Journal a great deal.

"I was playing a hunch," Mr. Mulcahy admitted this week. "It's not a good thing to do, but I was fortunate, this time. I went out to the flying field to see Lindbergh when he first arrived from San Diego by way of St. Louis. He impressed me as a fellow who would win out. Probably that is why I believed the reports from Naval Communications."

Second to the Lindbergh story in point of sales recorded was the death of the screen idol, Rudolph Valentino. This story chalked up an 833,000 record for the Journal. The Sacco-Vanzetti story boosted the Journal to 750,000, an increase of about 50,000 considered good for the summer season.

The government statement issued by the Journal on April 1 of this year gave the paper's circulation as 686,740. How big stories will jump a metropolitan daily's circulation is shown by the following table of approximate figures:

Edward West Browning testifies in divorce suit, Jan. 31, circulation goes to approximately 735,000.

Snyder-Gray verdict and Nungesser-Coli lost, two stories on same day, May 10, circulation goes to approximately 786,000.

Lindbergh reaches Paris, May 21, circulation goes to approximately 850,000.

Chamberlin and Levine land in Germany, June 6, circulation goes to approximately 775,000.

Dempsey beats Sharkey on a foul, day after fight, July 22, circulation goes to approximately 765,000.

Mr. Mulcahy was brought up on big headlines and he won't concede that they need any defense. He traces the history of the "screamers" back to the Spanish-American war days when Mr. Brisbane first became connected with the Journal after leaving the World.

"The first big headlines were designed by Mr. Brisbane with Ed Matthews, then news editor of the Journal who died a dozen years ago," Mr. Mulcahy recalled. "When the war started the Journal was only about six months old. Declaration of war was announced by the one word, WAR, in type that ran from the top of the page to within an inch of the bottom.

"I don't think big headlines need to be defended. I don't think that people read only the headlines.

"As I see it, the headline is the direct descendant of the old town crier. Probably the crier yelled loudest when there was something important to yell about. But the people were always waiting to hear what he was yelling. If he didn't yell loudly and they missed him they were anxious and worried that perhaps he had shouted at the top of his lungs and they had simply failed to hear him. Probably they grumbled to themselves, 'why doesn't that fellow yell louder, I didn't hear what he said.' We consider it is an accommodation to the people to yell out loud all the time. There is always news big enough to be shouted. News isn't hot one day and cold the next. If an editor cares to see it and play it, there is hot news every day in the year."

Mr. Mulcahy started his work "chasing copy" on the New York Evening World in 1896. He joined the staff of the Journal shortly after it started, and with the exception of a short period on the Chicago Herald-Examiner in 1914 and on the Detroit Times from 1921 to 1925 has been connected with the same paper ever since.

Mr. Mulcahy's father was a newspaper man, working in the mechanical departments of New York newspapers, and Mr. Mulcahy would like to see his own two sons, Jack and Charlie, follow in his footsteps.

"I'd like the Mulcahy family to own their newspaper, somewhere out in the prosperous middle west," he said this week, "I know they would make a success of it."

The two Mulcahy boys are old enough to work on newspapers and both of them are at work on the writing side of the business. Charlie has been on the staff of the New York Mirror and Detroit Times, while Jack is doing publicity work.

"There is nothing better for building character than a job as reporter," the Journal's managing editor concluded. "It is too bad that our reporters do not always get what they deserve. You will find that the most successful reporters from a financial point of view are those who have left newspaper work and have climbed to high positions in other lines of industry."

Oklahoma's Prosperity

Reflected by Income Tax Payments

Indicating the rapidly increasing prosperity of the people of Oklahoma, official figures show that income tax payments in the state grew from $9,820,419.90 for the year ending June, 30, 1925, to $15,788,615.86 for the fiscal year 1926, and $23,256,879.35 for 1927.

This shows a gain of 47% in federal income tax payments in this state for 1927 over 1926 and about 137% over the payments in 1925.

Only the state of Delaware showed a greater percentage of increase last year and its increase for the two-year period was only 118%, compared with the 137% for Oklahoma.

728,624 of these prosperous people live within the A. B. C. trading area served by the Daily Oklahoman and Oklahoma City Times.

Conscientious advertisers desiring to completely cover the Metropolitan Market will seriously consider the

because of its 90% home delivered circulation — a circulation covering all of Northern New Jersey — an area conceded to be the richest and most populous in the Metropolitan District.

Advertisers, recognizing this super-influence and pulling power, have given the NEWARK EVENING NEWS a place high in the ranks of newspaperdom. Evidence of their confidence is best shown in the enviable records attained during 1926 as in preceding years.

All the above tabulations compiled from reports of the Boston Newspapers' Statistical Bureau.

Circulation Figures Confirm the Answer:—

☛ Advertisers should know the facts, so they can appreciate the important difference between CIRCULATION and DISTRIBUTION. The POST, Boston's leading daily, gives the maximum number of INDIVIDUAL READERS—never the sale of many editions to the same readers—and, withal, leads heavily in total sales.

From Latest Sworn Net Paid Circulation Statements

Boston Post 394,851

Globe (Morning) . . . 125,531
Herald (Morning) . . 102,410 } 227,941

Globe (Evening) . . . 160,805
Traveler (Evening) 152,688 } 313,493

Among Boston morning newspapers:

Two Gain—One Loses—in Net Paid Circulation

—but note Post's overwhelming gain:

Boston Post (Morning) 394,851
A GAIN of 17,408 copies per day compared with a year ago

Boston Globe (Morning) 125,531
A Gain of 1,505 copies per day compared with a year ago

Boston Herald (Morning) 102,410
A Loss of 4,853 copies per day compared with a year ago

*Thus, it will be seen that every weekday the Post sells---

AN eight months lead such as the Syracuse, N. Y. Herald has experienced during 1927 is conclusive evidence of the choice of the Local and National Advertisers.

When you add to this a continuous and outstanding lead which the Herald has enjoyed for very many years there is only one conclusion to draw. The Herald is first choice. It has readers with buying power. It has concentrated circulation in Syracuse and the Suburban field, the major market and the field of least resistance to sales.

How Fast Against Tide?

That's how old salts judged a ship. A good method to measure newspaper progress. During 1927, while advertising linage is ebbing, the Courier-Post has

An "Over-flowing Market"

and How To Reach it

Washington (D. C.) the market, includes not only the Capital City of the Nation but a 25 mile radius into the adjoining counties of Maryland and Virginia—as shown by the map.

Within this territory are nearly 800,000 people—with that variety of wants which cultivated tastes, and the means to gratify them, demand—users of commodities—buyers of luxuries.

Reaching this large market is both easy and economical. The Star — Evening and Sunday — is the one and ONLY paper needed to cover completely every nook and corner of this territory—and every issue goes by special carrier or rural mail DIRECTLY INTO THE HOMES.

Our Statistical Department will be glad to send any details which will aid you in a better understanding of this market—its true extent and possibilities.

The Daily Illini

Benefits by Using the Ludlow System

Herbert A. Rice, of the Illini Publishing Company, Champaign, Ill., in telling about his experience with Ludlow service, says:

"Its use in our plant has thoroly convinced us that Ludlow composition is quicker, cleaner, and better than the one-type-at-a-time system.

"The advantages of having an unlimited supply of new type, as needed, are so obvious it is unnecessary to comment upon them.

"The size of the paper no longer causes any concern in the composing-room and without exception, all of our compositors are convinced of the superiority of Ludlow composition."

Let us show you what the Ludlow can do for you.

The Columbus Dispatch

held an envied position in the front rank with America's Greatest Newspapers--

6th place

in the evening, and evening and Sunday morning fields

A full page advertisement in Printers' Ink Weekly, issue of August 18, over the signature of the Chicago Tribune showed the Columbus Dispatch was one of the six greatest evening and evening and Sunday morning newspapers in America in advertising volume during the first six months of 1927.

In meriting such close advertising comparison with newspapers published in cities two to seventeen times larger than Columbus, the Dispatch has given Columbus and the Great Central Ohio Market the distinction of being the most important market of its size in America.

This attainment, not of a few months, but of a decade, certainly speaks volumes for the strength of the Columbus Dispatch and the richness of its market.

"They allow me three thousandths variation . . . but I make them RIGHT"

This particular adjustment does not call for extreme accuracy as accuracy goes in the Linotype factory. Three thousandths of an inch—the thickness of a sheet of No. 16 bond—is close enough for all practical purposes, but this man scorns any such tolerance. He likes to see his micrometer barrel come to a stop precisely on the mark. That spirit, carried through every Linotype operation, has had much to do with building up the Linotype's reputation for long life and trouble-free operation.

1. It is humidified in the mill where made by a scientific process and contains the same moisture content throughout. It is not humanly possible to uniformly condition dry mats in the stereotype foundry, day in and out.
2. It thus gives a deep and even mold with less pressure on the roller and wear of molding blankets. It cannot injure type. Without any preparation whatever it is easier to mold than any other dry mat—Stereotypers please note.
3. The plates cast from such a mold necessarily give better printing. This is especially noticeable in printing half tones. The printing is sharp and black.
4. It saves from 1/4 to 1/2 inch more print paper than any other dry mat—and remember your heaviest cost of production is the bill for newsprint. WOOD mats (conditioned in the newspaper plant) have always effected a greater saving of paper than any other make of mat. And the mill conditioned WOOD mat further increases this saving without narrowing the margins of the page. No matter what dry mat you may be using you will save more print paper with it.
5. An outstanding feature of the WOOD dry mat is its bulldog stayback. Visits to any large newspaper plants will show that the WOOD mat saves an enormous amount of time and physical labor over other dry mats in the important operation of packing-out the blanks before casting. The WOOD mat may be molded to the full depth of the form, does not cut through, and will hold its full molded depth until the plate is cast.

   Stated as a simple fact and not as a criticism, dry mats of other makes cut through on the column rules and crack on the bolsters if molded deep. They are spongy, do not hold the impression, and the shallow molds resulting need exceedingly close packing to escape smudgy printing—a great waste of precious time and manual labor.

   The mill conditioned mat has remarkable stayback, and, without cutting or cracking, the impression may be driven into it to the backbone and will stay put.

POLICY AND PURPOSE

WOOD FLONG CORPORATION created and developed the dry mat process in America. For years it has enjoyed a substantial revenue from the sale of WOOD HUMIDORS. It demonstrated beyond question that a good humidor was needed to properly condition any dry mat on the market until now. It has now perfected a dry mat which needs no humidor, nor any kind of newspaper plant conditioning. It still sells WOOD HUMIDORS to any who want them, but has not permitted their sale to prevent it from making a better dry mat for newspapers and to simplify the process.

It may be assumed that we would not have deliberately discarded our income from the sale of humidors without having first made sure that our mill conditioned mat does everything we claim for it.

With due consideration for the irritated feelings of our competitors we reserve the right to further improve and simplify the dry mat process when and as we can.

We particularly recommend the mill conditioned dry mat to newspapers which are using dry mats of other than WOOD make, but those who use WOOD mats and condition them in their own plant will find the mill conditioned mat a better and cheaper proposition.

As this development concerns the peace of mind of your stereotyper and lightens his burden, please call to his attention.

GOOD SHIP 1927

THE final quarter of the business year is upon us—a year concerning which there was some pessimism in January. EDITOR & PUBLISHER'S regular semi-annual compilation of linage records indicates that the newspapers' revenue for 1927 will be approximately 2.3 per cent less than in 1926. This is not surprising. That the current year would not show the averages that prevailed in last year's phenomenal peak was a fact discounted many months ago.

Newspaper circulations have held wonderfully well this year, a splendid flow of news, largely concerning aviation, having in many instances wiped out the usual mid-summer slump which is usually depended on to pull down averages.

By and large it has been a good year to date and the promise to us seems fair. Reports from manufacturing industries and retail and wholesale trade are that fall business is opening with goods in excellent demand, calling for larger merchandise schedules than had been anticipated. All the familiar barometers indicate a good Autumn and Winter, such as car-loadings, bank clearances, abundant crop yields, often at better than usual prices, and generally satisfactory conditions elsewhere throughout the field of industry. The present estimate is that this year's total volume of production and sales of automobiles will be about ten per cent less, in point of units, than in 1926. Ford's shutdown is the principal reason for the production drop.

The commodity price level has been steady and is now rising. No cloud is visible on the horizon and the good ship 1927 bids fair to make the voyage that was generally expected of her.

Many a college athletic team has been driven home to victory by a good cheer leader on the side-line and many a newspaper is made to win popular success because its management is wise enough to encourage in the whole staff the spirit of unity, loyalty, enterprise and just reward.

CITY TRAFFIC JAM

NO American city has solved its traffic situation and with many there is no serious plan of relief for the amazing congestion which increases year by year. Surely, there is no larger local responsibility for newspaper editors. The strain that some twenty-three millions of registered automobiles are putting on narrow streets not designed for such traffic, has become acute. The annual increase of the number of automobiles is something like two million cars. Henry Ford has estimated that the saturation point will be reached when thirty million cars were in operation. Can the streets of your city accommodate a third more cars?

Editors must think of city traffic jams not only as a huge economic waste, immensely costly to mercantile life, but as one of the great menaces to human life, since in 1926 the death toll of the automobile was more than 20,000, besides half a million injured.

Such a ghastly record cries out for correction and if the traffic jam is to increase year by year nothing is left for the cities to do but rebuild, at vast expense, their principal thoroughfares or invent some means of safe distribution of vehicular traffic.

The American Academy of Political and Social Science has just brought out an excellent symposium of articles by experts on city traffic, dealing most comprehensively with every phase of the question and detailing the most approved means of relief. It would be a useful contribution to any newspaper editor who is writing on the subject. The editorial offices of the Academy are at 3622 Locust Street, Philadelphia and EDITOR & PUBLISHER takes the liberty of suggesting that students of the subject obtain copies of this excellent series of articles.

"The newspaper habit has caught every worth-while American and he buys and reads his daily paper. Any message, therefore, in the newspaper comes to him fresh and welcome."—J. C. McQuiston, Advertising Manager of Westinghouse.

He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city.—Proverbs, XVI; 32.

LORD HEWART'S ASSAULT

DOES the business office rule the modern newspaper as Lord Hewart, Chief Justice of Great Britain, charged before the American Bar Association? That great lawyer holds it is so, largely by reason of advertising control, and logically asserts that as the newspaper has become merely a commercial article of trade, "like so much soap, oil or tinned meat," it deserves no special privilege.

Yes, it is true—of a section of the press. There are newspapers that are as commercial as any meat tinnery of their towns. There are publishers who trade on constitutional privilege and do not deserve the special tenderness of government because of anything they contribute to the people. Yes, it is true that there are editors who suppress news for advertisers and others who puff any person or enterprise when advertising patronage is in the offing. Every newspaper man knows this is true, that it has always been true in America and in England and in Europe and wherever newspapers are published.

But, broadly speaking, Lord Hewart's charge is an unconscionable libel on the general press of America, of Britain and of other countries in Europe, South America, Japan and elsewhere. For one publisher who sacrifices honor for greed there are many who practice within a voluntary ethical code, based on the rights of the reader, more scrupulously by far than does the average member of the bar within the code of his guild which is protected by prescribed penalties for violations. We assert this without the slightest question of its accuracy. Never in the history of our press have editors been so free as now to print the truth as they find it. Never has news been printed in such volume or detail. Suppression? Of what, please? Will the gentleman specify? Suppression of important news is so rare that when it happens in this country it is a scandal that the rank and file of newspaper men expect EDITOR & PUBLISHER to expose.

The veriest tyro in elemental political economy knows that there is no freedom in the modern world that is not solidly based on economic independence. The American press is free by reason of the very element that the British Chief Justice assigns as the source of its alleged downfall. Through the development of the science of advertising, itself now generally purged of the old forms of fraud and deception that made it objectionable, the newspaper press has become prosperous and independent. It possesses means by which to render efficient public service. It is economically beyond the reach of subsidy or any other venal approach. This is not only the logic of the situation, it is the general fact. There are abuses, which we admit, but it is unfair to use them as the basis of sweeping charges against "the press."

English friends advise us not to take Lord Hewart too seriously, as he is famous at home for sharp-tongue wit, delighting in causing some to squirm that others may smile. If he thought to ingratiate himself with the American bar the joke is rather on him, it seems to us, since the average lawyer here jolly well knows from daily experience how much he can trifle with the average local editor when the subject is news that belongs to the people. Our own belief is that Lord Hewart is humorous like a fox. He may very well foresee the day when the free press will take the lid from a legal system whose circumlocution, incompetency and corruption are so notorious that the average man distrusts it and if possible avoids it as though it were the plague.

A WORTH-WHILE FIGHT

ALABAMA offers a situation which challenges the attention not only of the nation's press but of all American citizens who regard constitutional rights as the basis of freedom. In Alabama masked and hooded ignorance has drunk deep of the wine of governmental power and has gone on a wild and reeling spree that is certain ultimately to wind up disastrously in a muddy ditch, which would be perfectly all right if it were not also inevitable that before the crash comes some damage will have been done to the reputation of a great estate.

Alabama is ruled by the Ku Klux Klan. Under this shelter there have been instances of mob brutality in the state that have shocked the nation. Self-appointed "guardians" of the public have engaged in shameful floggings and other lawless practices which would have been winked and blinked at by the state's officials were it not for the courageous protests of good newspapers whose editors know right from wrong. As many of our readers are doubtless aware the answer of the K.K.K. to the protesting newspaper press was legislative action which would give any city or incorporated town, any county, or the State itself, power to prosecute any newspaper in which "libelous matter" is published in reference to such locality. The newspaper could be prosecuted in any jurisdiction where it has circulation and fined up to $25,000, or condemned to pay damages to be assessed by a jury. It was also provided that "no other court shall have any authority to mitigate or reduce" such damages. The proposed law, which was to run retroactively for a year, was reported favorably by the Alabama house, but the bill failed to come to a vote before the legislature adjourned. However, at the next session of the legislature it is to be pressed, according to its excited proponents.

The attitude of a majority of the Alabama newspapers to this outrageous attempt to answer legitimate newspaper criticism of the state's government by statutory enactments plainly calculated to persecute free newspapers and silence truth, is very well stated by the Birmingham News which has been a leader in the fight. Recently, in an editorial review of the entire matter, the editor said: "The News is not one whit awed by what has come to pass under the present administration of this state's government. It did not cower before the attempt of the Governor and his legislature to tear up the American Bill of Rights guaranteeing freedom of the press, as though that constitutional provision were a mere 'scrap of paper.' It knew, and it still knows, that back of all legislative or executive tyrannies are this country's courts, federal as well as state, ready and able to protect the inalienable rights of its citizens. * * * If the voices of newspapers, speaking in defense of elemental decency and fundamental justice in the country's life are to be silenced by legislative and executive tryannies like the Frey libel bills of the Alabama Legislature, then this state and this country should know the reason why."

If we know the newspaper men of Alabama as well as we think we do they will give these audacious political thugs who are so free to trifle with constitutional rights the dose they are looking for. Alabama journalism will not only tear off the mask but plant a solid fist in the smirking, cowardly face it conceals.

Men live by processes of the mind—exist by processes of the body.

TIES THAT DON'T BIND

TIE-UP advertising—local firms supporting a national campaign in their local daily—is now working to the advantage of newspapers which enthusiastically support it. Energy displayed in getting volumes of local distributors to rally round the national copy gets its reward the next year. National space is halved, or more drastically reduced, and the newspaper is told to get the difference out of the local tie-ups. The tribute is flattering to the power of newspaper copy, but hardly favorable to increasing profits. It is something to be handled vigorously by newspaper managers and their national representatives, for the tie-up idea is a natural development and should not be killed by abuse.

PERSONAL

Ray Whittaker, assistant news editor, El Paso Herald, has resigned to go with the Associated Press, Denver, effective Sept. 19. For several years he was a news man in Albany, Utica, Syracuse and Elmira, N. Y.

FOLKS WORTH KNOWING

PETER VISCHER, while continuing as sporting writer for the New York World, is now also editor of Polo, a new magazine, and the only one of its kind published in this country.

PETER VISCHER

Mr. Vischer started newspaper work at 14 in 1912, when he owned, edited, set, printed and distributed his own paper called "The Staten Island Parrot." It ran for two years and came out every week with four to eight pages.

When he went to college he was managing editor of the Cornell Daily Sun and during summer vacations was one of the editors of Aviation. He was a member of the class of 1919 at Cornell, but didn't graduate until 1920 because of the war.

Beginning his New York experience on the New York Evening Post as a copyreader, he wrote editorials for the New York Sun on the side, and in this way finally got a job on the latter paper. His next step was to the New York World, which he joined in December, 1922, as a night re-write man. By the following spring, when he was 24, he was made assistant city editor and acting city editor. After that he was a reporter, starting the Hall-Mills case for the World, and also covering the Stokes divorce trial and the Untermyer transit investigation.

Back on the Evening Post Mr. Vischer had written some polo, and in 1922 he took on polo for the World in preparation for the matches of 1923. He is now a member of the World's sporting department, covering polo and golf.

Mr. Vischer was the first national vice-president of Sigma Delta Chi, national journalistic fraternity.

H. R. Schneider has resigned as telegraph editor of the Columbus Ohio State Journal.

H. B. Jefferson, news editor Sydney (N. S.) Record, is spending his vacation in the eastern part of Nova Scotia.

James Hosie, formerly connected with the Scranton (Pa.) Sun, is to enter Harvard law school this fall.

M. J. Costello has been named editor and general manager of the Scranton (Pa.) Catholic Light, official organ of the Roman Catholic diocese in the Scranton, Pa., Diocese.

A BUDGET OF STARS

Newspaper editors have been disposed to think of a general illustrated service as a good picture news service with a few everyday features thrown in.

Not so with the new service of the Central Press Association!

Here is a budget service with star features of metropolitan caliber. Just consider:

Dr. Lulu Hunt Peters in "Diet and Health."
Burton Rascoe's New York letter.
Charles P. Stewart's Washington Correspondence.
Beatrice Burton's serials.
Jess Cargill's cartoons.
Percy Crosby's "Skippy" strip.
Charles B. Driscoll's and Grove Patterson's daily editorial features.
And a dozen other star offerings.

Correction: A short time ago we announced a total clientele of 560. We find now that our list of daily newspaper customers reaches a total of 615.

The Central Press Ass'n., Inc.

V. V. McNITT, President — 1435 E. 12th STREET CLEVELAND — FARRIS A. FLINT, Manager

"The Metropolitan for Fiction" is borne out by the steadily spreading success of the daily Serials by Mildred Barbour.

Editors and circulation managers find that Barbour Serials have the arresting action and sustained interests that attract and hold readers.

Each of the 72 dramatic chapters in a Barbour Serial is illustrated.

"Jealous Hearts" is the current release.

BRITISH CIRCULATIONS RAPIDLY INCREASED

Arthur Grime, Yorkshire Post, and Hugh MacKay, Liverpool Echo, Report Home Prosperity Visiting Here

Despite the admitted fact that England is not yet back to pre-war prosperity, newspapers in the old country are doing remarkably well right now.

Bringing this message from that country were Arthur Grime, Yorkshire Post, and Hugh MacKay, Liverpool Post and Echo, who, completing a tour of Canada with the Newspaper Society of England, visited New York this week. They plan to sail for home from Montreal on Friday. On the Canadian tour were 95 British newspaper men with their wives.

Newspaper property values have increased steadily during the last 10 years, the visitors reported. While this was mainly on account of the development of advertising, it was also due to increased circulations. They said the newspaper reading habit had progressed in a surprisingly rapid manner in Britain lately. To gain circulation the Yorkshire and Liverpool papers Mr. Grime and Mr. MacKay represent, rely chiefly on canvassing, although they also perform social services and hold exhibitions for the purpose of building good-will. Cross-word puzzles are still popular in England, they said.

Both English newspaper men preferred their own method of news presentation, which might be described as "quieter than the American method." There is very little variation in the newspaper circulations in England apart from steady growth, and they attribute this solid aspect to the absence of screamer headlines.

Circulation revenues of the papers represented by Mr. Grimes and Mr. MacKay a little more than meet the cost of newsprint, after deduction of commissions and department costs. Maximum size of their papers are 16 pages and they average around 10 or 12 pages. Copies retail for an English penny and wholesale at 13 for 8 pence.

Mr. Grimes is general manager of the Yorkshire Post, Yorkshire Evening Post, Leeds Mercury, Yorkshire Weekly Post and Doncaster Chronicle, a weekly. Mr. MacKay has the same title on the Liverpool Post, Liverpool Echo, Liverpool Daily Courier, Liverpool Evening Express, and Liverpool Weekly Post.

They were enthusiastic over their Canadian trip and the possibilities of the Dominion and its newspapers.

INTERTYPE IDEAL NEWS FACE

Was Your News Type Designed For a Job Printing Plant?

Do you know that any type of the Old Style group has never been fully successful as a news face for newspapers?

Types of the Old Style group are excellent for circulars, folders, booklets, etc., where the flowing lines of the Old Style have a chance to flow. These flowing lines are one of the elements of confusion when an old style type is used as a news face on a newspaper.

Basically a newspaper page is a rigid proposition.

Therefore, to produce a 100% legible news face we must begin with any one of a group of type faces that contains elements which are in harmony with elements of the thing on which the type face is used. Any Modern Roman type face will be better than an Old Style Roman for a news face in a newspaper. The Modern Roman group is a compact, steady group — the group from which most school books are printed, where easy reading is a prime essential.

Intertype IDEAL News Face is basically a Modern Roman face — one that has been designed especially for newspapers — a perfectly balanced letter, perfectly spaced —in short: a 100% legible news face.

Let your readers decide whether your newspaper needs a new dress. The nearest Intertype office has the plan. It will be sent without a bill.

61 ADVERTISING MEN HEAR MEARS' TALKS

Business Problems Affecting Advertising Discussed and Analyzed in Cleveland—Lew Hahn Also a Speaker

Sixty-one newspaper advertising managers gathered at the Hotel Statler, Cleveland, Sept. 15 to discuss, study and analyze problems affecting the advertising business and incomes of metropolitan daily papers.

The sessions continued for two days, four business sessions being held.

Charles W. Mears, founder of the Newspaper Advertising Study, and founder and dean of the Cleveland School of Advertising and Sales and nationally known marketing counsellor, led the discussions at all sessions.

Lew Hahn, managing director of the National Retail Drygoods Association, was a leading speaker.

The problems of business failure, mergers, shopping newspapers, and house-to-house circulars, merchant surveys of newspaper circulation and the high cost of distribution were all under discussion. Only one newspaper in each city is allowed to have representation at the sessions. A majority of the advertising managers and executives of the Scripps-Howard newspapers were in attendance.

Those present were:

N. Y. DAILY NEWS PAYS TRIBUTE TO PAYNE

Competing Tabloid Expresses Sorrow at Passing of Brilliant Editor of Mirror—Requiem Mass Said in West New York

An editorial in the New York Daily News, this week headed "Brave Men" paid special tribute to Phil Payne, managing editor and vice-president of the New York Daily Mirror, lost with "Old Glory." It was published on Sept. 9 in the tabloid.

"A peculiarly personal and poignant interest in Old Glory is felt by the men and women who work on this newspaper," the editorial read. "This interest centers in Phil Payne, the dynamic little editor who joined the staff of the News, almost at its inception and whose journalistic growth was synonymous with the growth of the paper on which he lavished his energy and enthusiasm.

"He was our city editor and later managing editor for several years and his work was marked by brilliance; a quality brought to fruition by his extraordinary enthusiasm for his job.

"We are profoundly sorry that his latest dash toward the heights has apparently ended so tragically; and the editorial 'we' in this instance is unusually significant, for it speaks from the hearts of dozens of his former co-workers and friends in these offices."

A requiem mass was celebrated in St. Joseph's Catholic Church, West New York, N. J., on Sept. 13 for Mr. Payne. Many friends of the editor, including fellow-workers on the Mirror and the Hudson Dispatch of which he was formerly city editor, attended the mass. Among them was Haddon Ivons, editor of the Hudson Dispatch, who hired Payne as a reporter 14 years ago.

NEWSPAPER INSTITUTE OCT. 3

The sixth annual Newspaper Institute sponsored by the New Jersey Press Association, will be held at Rutgers University, New Brunswick, N. J., Oct. 3-4. Speakers will include John M. Thomas, President of Rutgers; Allen S. Willi, professor of journalism, Rutgers; R. P. Williams, superintendent of railway mail services of the Post Office department; and Grace Lockhart of the Asbury Park (N. J.) Press.

HONOR FOR A. J. POWERS

A. J. Powers, president of the Powers Reproduction Corporation, New York, was made an honorary member of the Association of Young Advertising Men of New York at a testimonial luncheon this week. Mr. Power's election was a token of appreciation by the association for his interest and counsel since its inception 12 years ago.

WITHDRAWS AIR PRIZE

Philadelphia Bulletin Cancels $25,000 Offer for Atlantic Hop

Because of the loss of life in recent overseas air flights and the increasing hazardous weather conditions, the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin award of $25,000 for a non-stop flight from Europe to Philadelphia has been withdrawn. This decision was reached by the Evening Bulletin and the Aviation Committee of the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce, which had been acting as trustee and administrator of the award.

A cablegram announcing the decision has been sent to the principal aero clubs and aviation associations of London, Paris, Berlin, Rome and other European cities covering all the possible entries in the proposed flight.

UNITED TYPOTHETÆ MEETS IN NEW YORK

Master Printers Gather for 41st Annual Convention—Speaker Deplores—"Typographical Crime Wave"

Master printers and members of allied graphic arts, not only from this country but from many European nations, gathered at the Hotel Commodore this week for the forty-first annual convention of the United Typothetæ of America. Six affiliated conventions held their annual gatherings during the week, while the Fourth Educational Graphic Arts Exposition at the Grand Central Palace will remain open for another week in order that all the printing folk may view its latest machinery and masterpieces of the printer's art.

The convention was formally welcomed by Acting Mayor Joseph V. McKee, president of the Board of Aldermen.

E. F. Eilert, of New York City, president of the association, delivered his annual address, reminding his associates of the great progress both financial and artistic which has come to the graphic arts during the year. Ralph Parlette, of Chicago, also spoke.

There are today 150,000 printing students in the United States, Fred J. Hartman, director of education of the association, declared.

"No other nation can lay claim to a greater development in the appreciation of fine printing, or to more general understanding of the craft than the United States," he said. "We concede that the master craftsmen of other nations are at the top of the ladder, but America leads for a general popular appreciation of good work."

Carnegie Institute of Technology at Pittsburgh would establish two chairs of printing at its opening session this week, he said.

Fred Farrar, vice-president of the Typographic Service Committee, of New York City, in an address before the International Trade Composition Association, regretted the "Crime Wave in Typography." The newspaper column with headlines which told the whole story at a glance he praised as the perfect typographical form, and urged advertisers to follow this style. Two great crimes in most advertising copy, he said, were congestion of type and failure to tell the story in a few bold words.

British delegates who spoke were S. G. Bottomley, head of the Leeds School of Printing, and George W. Jones, "Dean of English Printers," whose plant is "At the Sign of the Dolphin," in London.

GRATZ HEADS ELECTROTYPERS

Emil Gratz of Pittsburgh was elected president of the International Association of Electrotypers which held its 30th annual convention in New York last week. Other officers chosen were: William B. Jones, St. Louis, vice-president; Victor Diver, Toronto, vice-president; Ralph Schwartz, Cleveland, secretary, and August Johnson, Minneapolis, statistician.

LOWER POSTAL RATE CAMPAIGN OPENED

Postal Service Committee of U. S. Chamber of Commerce Meets in Washington—Two Newspaper Publishers Attend

Demands for a revision of postal rates to be presented to the next Congress in the name of all classes of mail users and business in general were formulated Tuesday at a meeting of the Postal Service Committee of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, at which newspaper and magazine publishers, railroads and mail users' organizations were represented.

Facts presented to the committee disclosed a marked falling off in various classes of mail handled by the postal service, due, it was said, to excessive rates, with a resulting loss in postal revenues, and a detrimental effect upon business in general and the public interest.

Besides the rate changes the committee decided to recommend an overhauling of the Postoffice Department's system of bookkeeping, which makes no distinction between free or less than cost services and revenue-producing services. The committee held that the mail users should not be made to shoulder the burden of the deficit created by free or less than cost services which should be charged to the general treasury.

Members of the committee attending the meeting were Lucius Teter, president of the Chicago Trust Company, who acted as chairman; J. D. Barnum, publisher of the Syracuse Post-Standard; David Burpee, president of the Atlee Burpee Company, Philadelphia; M. O. Chance, vice-president of the Griffith Coal Corporation, Washington, D. C.; Frederick J. Cross, vice president of the Robeson Rochester Corporation, Rochester; Colonel Robert Ewing, publisher of the New Orleans State; H. L. Fairfield, manager of the mail, baggage and express traffic of the Illinois Central System, Chicago, and Henry S. Lyons, secretary and director of the New England Fuel and Transportation Company, Boston.

"The present postal rates," said Mr. Teter, "have been in effect long enough to disclose those which are unwise and uneconomical.

"Instead of producing more revenue they have resulted in a pronounced falling off of certain classes of mail to the detriment of business and the general public.

"The revision of rates and the correction of inequalities in rates should be undertaken by Congress without delay. And along with these changes lies the task of getting the Postoffice Department bookkeeping down to a business basis. Until this is done postal rate making will always be based to some extent upon conjecture rather than upon the cost of the actual service rendered.

"The department now gives away with its right hand what it takes in with its left and shows a deficit, whereas certain classes of mail are showing a clear profit. It is made to transport Government mail free of charge and at the same time it attempts to place the burden of that and other expenses upon commercial mail which is already paying more than the cost of service."

WRIGHT COMPANY GROWING

Beginning Jan. 1, 1928, the product of the Bathurst and Donnacona mills will be sold by the Wright Company, which will continue to sell the output of the E. B. Eddy Company and the Kennebec Paper Corporation. The company will then have an aggregate tonnage of 600 tons a day. On Oct. 1 the Wright Company will move its offices to 40 East 49th St., New York.

STAGES BABY SHOW

The Cairo (Ill.) Evening Citizen on Sept. 9 held its seventh annual Baby Show in connection with a local furniture store. A total of 176 babies were in attendance, 41 of them from outside Cairo. Local merchants gave prizes.

OUR FRIEND— THE DEALER

It matters not how eloquent or appealing your advertising message may be —if the dealer and his clerks are not enthusiastic about your product.

It matters not how attractive your package may be—if the dealer does not have it in stock.

It matters not how much you invest in beautiful window and counter displays —if the dealer does not display them.

The exact center of the dealer's counter is the most critical point in your merchandising journey. There your product lives or dies, regardless of the amount of time, money and effort you have put behind it.

And it is exactly at that point that The Binghamton, N. Y., Press is of most value to the advertisers who use its columns.

The dealer and his clerks know The Binghamton Press. They respect it and have confidence in it. The fact that this newspaper accepts your advertising message for insertion in its columns is generally evidence enough that your product is worth stocking, and worth recommending.

The Binghamton Press prides itself on the fact that it has built up just as strong a dealer-confidence as it has a reader-confidence, and advertisers may enter the Binghamton Market with the assurance that their representatives will be well received by almost every dealer in this area.

What more can you ask of a newspaper?

THE JOHN BUDD COMPANY

National Advertising Representatives

NEW YORK 9 East 37th Street. CHICAGO Tribune Tower. ST. LOUIS Chemical Building ATLANTA Healey Building.

SAN FRANCISCO Sharon Building. LOS ANGELES Chamber of Commerce Building. PORTLAND Security Building.

The Ad-Viser of The Binghamton Press is a monthly publication devoted to the interests of the retail trade of the Binghamton Market. It is known as "The Dealer's Bible." Are you on the mailing list?

EDITOR & PUBLISHER'S MARKET GUIDE for 1928

to be published in November, 1927, will be larger and better than any previous edition

It will contain surveys of more cities. Its surveys will be more detailed. Its new outline maps will be a great help to the advertiser in visualizing retail trading areas. Never before have replies to our Questionnaires for data been received so promptly—never have the blank forms been filled out so completely.

What Does This Mean To The Publisher Of The Daily Newspaper?

It means, of course, that the 1928 Market Guide will be appreciated as never before by Advertising Agencies and National Advertisers and will be even more effective than before as a place for the publisher to spread the story of his paper and its coverage of the local market. For the book, tremendous as its influence in the past, is bound to be more widely and more intensively used than ever before.

So reserve your space—get your copy in—as soon as you can—right away—while the preferred space pickings are good then Come to Pennsylvania!

If your product has repeat value—if you are convinced from experience that once your product reaches the consumer and is used and will continue to be used as long as he can buy it readily—furthermore, if you have faith in the value of well directed advertising—then come to the Keystone State and let these leading newspapers listed below, establish your product with Pennsylvania's great and rich buying power.

These papers enter the homes of a class of people who need no introduction to the merits of the advertised product. They know that every product advertised in these papers carries with it an absolute guarantee that it will meet every claim or representation made for it.

If your product will stand the test of quality and utility, don't hestitate to come to Pennsylvania. A profitable market awaits you.

The Waterloo Tribune

offers excellent coverage of the eighty prosperous communities in its territory as well as the city of Waterloo.

The Tribunes strength is demonstrated by an increase of 1800 readers in six months—net paid circulation now over 13,500—and an increase of 150,000 lines of advertising in the first 6 months of 1927 over the same period of 1926.

WHAT EYE SPECIALISTS SAY ABOUT

Ionic No. 5

TRADE LINOTYPE MARK

MERGENTHALER LINOTYPE CO.
BROOKLYN, NEW YORK

GENTLEMEN:

Standardizing the type in journalism in general being such an important factor in the welfare and visual conservation of the present and future generations, I welcome a departure from the old style type which has always been a strain, even on natural, normal eyes, or eyes made normal by artificial aid (lenses).

But few normal eyes possess a retina (which is the natural film of our eyes) with an abundant supply of rods and cones therein, and upon this factor depends a normal eye's acuteness of vision. Therefore, I believe, seven point Ionic No. 5 type best for the eyes.

Get~ Indiana's facts

The advertiser who wants to test out his advertising plan and be sure of his market before sinking a huge appropriation into a national newspaper campaign, will find Indiana an ideal tryout market.

In the first place, the state is small in area and yet thickly populated with over 3,000,000 inhabitants. Secondly, Indiana is both an important agricultural and industrial district. In the cities huge industries give employment to hundreds of thousands of people, while in the suburbs or country, great farms are under cultivation. Fine improved roads and highways connect all the cities and towns thru the state, and transportation facilities equal the best in the country.

With the elimination of a dividing line between city and country, your newspaper campaign in Indiana will reach all the inhabitants. The reaction of the people towards your product, therefore, will determine whether or not your campaign is properly planned and directed.

Don't forget Indiana when planning your tryout campaign.

Pulling Together Over 81 Years

Has brought about a relationship that has few parallels in the newspaper world. Faith in each other has enabled both community and newspaper to grow and prosper.

The Daily Pantagraph and Central Illinois

Offer to advertisers a combination that guarantees profitable sales return at a minimum of expense.

Over 19,500 Pantagraph homes in Bloomington and in 78 cities and towns in the garden spot of the world comprise a market second to none for every product used in typical American homes.

The Daily Pantagraph.

"Business is Excellent"

in one-half of Fort Worth's trade area

—and "Business is Good"

in the other half of the territory served by and serving Fort Worth

—this according to Forbes Magazine for June. The factors which entered into the survey upon which this condition was based are agriculture, industry, employment, trade, money and credit conditions.

—and not only this—Fort Worth and its Trade Territory have been in the "white spot" on the business map continuously for the past two years.

No wonder Fort Worth's trade area (West Texas) is considered the best "try-out" territory in the United States for any marketing campaign.

The Star-Telegram and Record-Telegram has more circulation than any other three papers combined in West Texas.

TEXAS CIRCULATORS ELECT E. C. DAVIS

Trip to Mexico Features San Antonio Meeting—Want Star Route Service for Second Class Mail

(By Telegraph to Editor & Publisher)

San Antonio, Sept. 15.—Meeting here Thursday in fourteenth annual convention, the Texas Circulation Managers Association elected E. C. Davis, Beaumont Enterprise and Journal, as president to succeed Walter Golden, Galveston News and Tribune, C. W. S. Lennett, San Antonio Express and Evening News, was named vice-president and H. E. Murphree, country circulation manager, Houston Chronicle, was re-elected secretary-treasurer for the fourth time. Laredo was selected for next year's convention.

The circulation managers left Thursday night to spend Friday in Laredo, Tex., and Nuevo Laredo, Mexico.

A luncheon and bullfight were features to be enjoyed on the Mexican side of the border.

W. P. Allen, general manager, Laredo Times, chaperoned the party from here. The principal action of the Thursday business session was the adoption of a resolution submitted by David and Jack Estes, Dallas News and Journal, urging uniform and adequate star route service for second class mail, deploring the apparent lack of a well defined policy as to star routes. The resolution pointed out that when some star routes failed to handle newspapers the papers were denied the character of service for which rural routes originally were intended. Co-operation of the Texas Publishers Association was requested. It was decided to resume publication of a quarterly bulletin for the association.

Davis, Estes and E. C. White, Houston Chronicle circulation manager, were appointed as a committee to work for a big Texas representation at the Pittsburg meeting of the International Circulation Managers' Association, now headed by Harold Hough, Fort Worth Star-Telegram and Record-Telegram next June.

Various circulation problems were discused without definite action. It was agreed that radio broadcasting adversely affects street sales. The eastern tendency to go back to the return privilege to newsboys and country agents was said not to prevail in Texas. Airplane delivery of newspapers is not yet practicable in Texas, discussions indicated. Baseball editions were considered a sort of "necessary evil." Induction of H. A. Paden, Sherman Democrat, gave the Association a total of forty-two members. The San Antonio Light and News and Express complimented the visitors with a luncheon and Mexican dinner. F. G. Huntress, publisher of the Express and News, spoke at the luncheon.

ADDING AFTERNOON EDITION

Shawnee (Okla.) Morning News to Publish Evening Edition, Sept. 19

Publication of an afternoon edition of the Shawnee (Okla.) Morning News, beginning Monday, Sept. 19, is announced by H. G. Spaulding, editor. Mr. Spaulding and H. T. Nisbett are owners and editors.

The new paper will have the full leased wire service of the Associated Press, the NEA Service Features and other feature services.

The paper will be published five afternoons a week, no Saturday paper being contemplated. Shawnee subscribers will receive the afternoon edition with the morning paper for a slight additional cost per month.

An open advertising rate is announced, with a special pickup ad rate for contract advertisers. There will be no contracts made for the afternoon edition and compulsory double advertising will not be forced, Mr. Spaulding said.

WOMEN IN ADVERTISING AND JOURNALISM

Ruth Hopkins Goes Into Training—Philadelphia Women Announce Scholarship Award—Windsor Editor Delegate to Conservative Convention

Ruth Hopkins

WHEN Ralph Vincent, Journal staff photographer, chanced to see Ruth opkins, club editor of the Portland Ore-n Daily Journal, holding a baby while tending an open house at the Doern-cker hospital for children recently, he uldn't resist the temptation to take a ot. Next day an enlarged copy of the cture he had taken appeared on the bul-tin board in the editorial rooms of the urnal, captioned:

"RUTH——IN TRAINING"

Few men or women have ever entered e editorial rooms of the Journal, taken f their hats and gone to work who ve made good, both in work and in iendships, as quickly as has "Peggy" opkins. She admitted on her first day at "fear and trembling" were her por-on. Today she is one of the most pular members of the staff.

The Board of Directors of the Phila-lphia Club of Advertising Women has varded a scholarship in the Charles orris Price School of the Poor Richard ub to Miss Kathryn Frances Bell. The ntest was based on a written article What is your idea of a good advertise-ent?" and a clipping of the advertise-ent on which the theme was written was be attached. The advertisement Miss ell submitted was for the Buick car d was entitled "Everything a Motor ar Can Offer." It appeared in the June issue of the Saturday Evening Post. Fifteen girls entered the contest which osed on June 20. The judges were T. Mulvey, of Barnes & Fehling Adver-ing Agency, Harry Hawkins of the hiladelphia Evening Bulletin, and Mor-n Gibbons-Neff, of Charles Paist Com-ny.

The course opens Sept. 26 and will run r 30 weeks. The scholarship is given r two years.

Mrs. Jean U. Fielding, editor of the Vindsor (N. S.) Tribune, has been ap-inted delegate-at-large to the Canadian ational Conservative Convention to be ld in Winnipeg the first week in ctober.

Miss Helen Havener, dramatic editor d special writer for the Portland Me.) Express has resigned to edit The dependent Woman, the official organ of e Business and Professional Women's ubs, published in New York.

Miss Havener was formerly city editor the Portland Press, coming to the Ex-press following the consolidation of the Press and the Herald. She started her newspaper work in Springfield, Mass.

During her career with the Express, Miss Havener fostered several cleanup crusades, the latest of which was the exposure of the unsanitary and prejudicial conditions existing at the Portland City Home.

The first dinner meeting of the League of Advertising Women of New York, will be held Sept. 20, at the Advertising Club. David Magowan will speak on "What the Country Newspaper Means to the Small Town." The guest of honor will be Miss Muriel Atkins, secretary of the Regents Club, London. Miss Florence Ficke is chairman of the dinner committee, Mrs. Mabel P. Hanford is chairman of the program committee, and Miss Dorothy Crowne, chairman of the evening.

Miss Margaret Summerville, society editor of the Grafton (W. Va.) Sentinel and a short story writer, fractured her right ankle recently while descending a stairway.

Miss Nelle M. Ribble, editorial secretary of the South Bend Tribune, who has been very ill, is again at her desk.

Miss Anne Chaimson of the Hartford Times advertising department has returned from a vacation in the White Mountains.

COVERING NIGHT CLUBS

The New York Telegram has now assigned a man to cover the night clubs. He writes under the name of "Le Boulevardier" and his column is headed "Broadway Brevities."

BUILDING NEWSPAPER CIRCULATION

"Zoo Party" Built Good Will for Duluth News Tribune—Penny Slug Used to Promote Serial Story—E. E. Keevin Champions Boys as Carriers

"ONE of the most successful stunts we have put on this year insofar as public response and good will were concerned."

That is how R. W. Bayne, publisher of the Duluth News Tribune, characterized a "Zoo Party" he recently gave children of his city.

When the Duluth Zoo added a number of new animals, the News Tribune made arrangements with the local street railway company for free transportation to the park for children under 14 years of age. The News Tribune printed coupons in the paper entitling youngsters who clipped them out and presented them to free rides.

"The trip was made on Friday, Sept. 2," Mr. Bayne said, "and more than 12,000 children cut out the coupons. The company had to double the number of cars in service."

A new way of introducing a serial story to prospective continuing readers was devised recently by A. D. Wallace, city circulation manager of the Washington (D. C.) Daily News. The name of the serial was "The Penny Princess." Several thousand two-penny cardboard slugs were distributed in envelopes reading: "A two-penny piece is enclosed. Use this to buy a copy of the News, containing complete installments to date of the 'Penny Princess.' The two-penny piece is good at all newsstands today. Two hundred dollars in prizes for Penny Princess readers! Today's paper gives complete details."

E. E. Keevin, director of the Roosevelt Newsboys' Association, Lynn, Mass., is a firm believer in the boy newspaper carrier, despite the current tendency to have men deliver the paper routes.

Mr. Keevin, in a statement to EDITOR & PUBLISHER this week, declared that while he appreciated the value of men he felt that the reason publishers were switching to older delivery hands was because they have "not reached that stage where they can look beneath the boy question, John M. Schmid, of the Hearst newspapers, and the Curtis Publishing Company, excepted."

"My contention is simply this," Mr. Keevin wrote, "that the American woodpile, that training ground for our early youth, has vanished, and its nearest substitute is the delivery of newspapers and magazines to the homes of America.

"Present day parents of sense know the value of keeping their children industrious. The other kind of parents are raising their offspring to be loafers or snobs.

"Marcus Loew, age 9, selling newspapers on the streets of New York is a shining example. Al Smith, age 10, selling papers near Fulton Ferry. He learned to swim in the East River and play handball on the side wall of a warehouse.

"Edison, Sapiro, the Van Sweringens and all the rest. They didn't have their breakfast in bed and their parents didn't park them in a boy's camp as they do in 1927.

"In closing, I may say that in this well-governed city of Lynn, I have 70 carrier newsboys covering every street with a morning delivery. The maximum age is 13. All branches of the municipal government, from the Mayor down, give their co-operation in encouraging the newsboys. Six newsboys are selected every year to go to college."

Ashley Bailey and Rene Bilodeau, Lewiston (Me.) Sun-Journal newsboys, were guests on a trip to Portland, Old Orchard and other cities, as a reward for obtaining the most new subscribers for their papers.

CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING

One Way to Impress a Hesitant Realtor—Officers Re-elected of New York Classified Association—Bar Association Aiding Classified

REAL ESTATE advertising was off. "No one is buying now," realtors said when solicited.

Roy Fuller, classified advertising manager of the Oklahoma News, clipped a full page advertisement, offering Kellogg's Corn Flakes and placed next to it a one-inch advertisement offering a $15,000 home for sale. His story to realtors was:

"You spend 98 cents to try and sell a $15,000 item, while Kellogg spends $214.20 to sell a 15 cent item."

Real estate advertising picked up.

Officers of the Classified Managers Association of New York City were re-elected at the first meeting of the season held at the Advertising Club of New York this week. They are: L. L. Heaton, New York Herald Tribune, president; John Irvin, New York Evening Telegram, vice-president; and John Finneran, New York Times, secretary and treasurer.

The New York Telegram issued its first school directory recently. It accounted for 4,600 lines of advertising. Edwin Skillman of the Telegram staff who directs the schools and musical instrument classifications, was in charge. The Telegram expects to make the supplement an annual affair.

The Association of Newspaper Classified Managers has obtained the support of the uniform laws committee of the American Bar Association in its efforts to draft a model law against fraudulent classified advertisers and "gyp" dealers.

Charles S. Whitman, ex-Governor of New York state, and former president of the Bar Association, has sent a notice to this effect in a letter to John Finneran, classified manager of the New York Times, and chairman of the legislative committee of the Association of Newspaper Classified Managers.

Mr. Finneran has submitted all the data on the subject in his possession to the uniform laws committee.

McKinley H. (Mack) Sauer, known to many Ohioians as a humorous writer of more than local fame, has joined the staff of the Portsmouth (O.) Times and Sun, in the capacity of classified advertising manager, Harry E. Taylor, publisher of the Portsmouth papers, has announced.

While attending Ohio University at Athens, O., seven years ago, Sauer took over the classified advertising department of the Athens Messenger. He did this in addition to his school work, and besides conducted a humorous column on the Messenger. He has since been classified manager on the Sandusky Register and the Middletown Journal, and has recently been connected with the Columbus Dispatch, where he has been writing the promotional advertising for the classified department.

Sauer writes a daily humorous column, which is printed on the first page of the classified section. He has written for several magazines.

REPRESENTING THE NEWSPAPERS

W. C. CHARLIER will be connected on and after October 3rd with the New York Staff of the Allen Klapp Company, representing the Middle West Newspaper List. Mr. Charlier has been connected with William A. Wilson for the past three years in representing the Sunset Magazine and several other western publications in the Eastern territory.

Fred Kimball, Inc., has been re-appointed National Advertising Representatives for the Brownsville (Pa.) Morning & Evening Telegraph effective Oct. 1.

HAGERSTOWN MAN HONORED

Leslie C. Beard, Sr., for many years a well-known newspaper man of Hagerstown, Md., was guest of honor at a dinner given by the staffs of the three Hagerstown newspapers, the Globe, Herald and Mail, as a farewell before he leaves for his new home in Brooklyn, N. Y. Mr. Beard has recently retired from active newspaper work, in which he has been engaged in Hagerstown for approximately 40 years. He was for many years city editor of the Globe, and for more than 25 years local correspondent for the Baltimore Sun.

NEW LABOR WEEKLY

The Labor Union, weekly, was launched at Dayton, O., Sept. 2, by the Central Labor Union, with R. L. McCormick as editor and Ed. C. Chamberlain as business manager. The initial issue was 72 pages and, according to the publishers, contained 1,008 separate advertisements.

SHOP TALK AT THIRTY

By MARLEN PEW

THERE isn't any news today, all being quiet and serene along the trail of civilization, and we must content ourselves and fill this column with a few minor human incidents which could not possibly measure up to conventional modern news standards. What "news" is continues to be a moot question—there are many definitions that we sometimes wonder if any one knows. But what isn't news is plain enough to all. By no stretch of the imagination does the following chatter qualify. It violates all of the known rules. It is offered with appropriate apologies.

THE other night we attended a Broadway musical variety show and drew a seat in the first row, coming almost knee to knee with the bugle player. We judged his age to be 60 and he is a bugler as well as bugle. When he emerged from the lobby hole under the stage he carried a great stack of sheet music arranged in the order of the performance, which he put up on his rack. Turning on the light he presently was bugling his part of a lively overture. This finished he wiped his mouth with the palm of his hand and then drew from the side pocket of his tuxedo a small, leather-bound volume which he opened to a marked page and set up at the left of the music rack. Throughout a performance of three hours the solemn bugler turned tricks with his brazen instrument, stubby fingers dancing on the stops, never missing a note when his cue came, but throughout the evening, during intervals when the bugle was not called for, he read from the little leather-bound book at the left of his rack. Not once did he glance at the brilliant action on the stage, nor at the roaring audience out front. When he was not playing he was reading and when his cue approached he would quickly mark the place in the book with a pencil, bring the bugle up to his lips and do his stuff. During the intermission I leaned over and glanced at the title of the book. It was the Life of Voltaire. The incident is not news, of course, but those of us who saw the bugler's performance will probably remember it long after we have forgotten every detail of the elaborate show we had paid to witness.

TWO years ago last winter a newspaper man in Washington, according to advices from a mutual friend, developed a cold" that lasted all spring and summer. Many doctors toyed with him. He took a short trip to Europe and found relief, but as soon as he returned he was bowled over by the same wretched, hacking cough. He visited a specialist, one of those chaps who make blood tests to determine what sort of germ is agitating one's head or tubes. The patient received 30 needle pricks in his arm each day until the reaction came on the 73rd. The physician decided that the particular bacteria found belonged to a parrot and, sure enough, the patient owned a parrot and had made a practise of playing with the bird every evening. He got rid of the parrot and the cold disappeared. Any "news" in that?

WE met an old reporter friend in a restaurant the other night. He was a go-getter in his youth and is a live wire now. An idea a minute is his choice. "How goes it?" we asked. "Oh, fine and glorious," he replied, adding that he was working on a scheme that had intrigued his fancy for years. Then he told about it. In brief, it was to establish in New York on a huge scale open-air grand opera at prices which would admit the very poor. The old reporter glowed when he told of the prospect of satisfying the hunger of music-loving working folks to whom grand opera is a luxury beyond their means. He also glowed as he told of the willingness of opera conductors and singers to engage in this philanthropic enterprise. "I have it all lined up, except the big money," he said. "I am working now to find the angel and I'll get him. We shall have popular opera on a scale never before approached." Just as we were parting my old friend confided that he had given all of his time to the opera enterprise for several weeks and had exhausted his bank account. He borrowed five dollars, which he promptly returned by mail.

AN actress, beautiful of face as a spring morning, a few years ago married the leading man of her company. For four years running she fulfilled her contract stage appearance each winter and gave her husband a son or daughter each summer. She loves her husband and he loves her and they have built a gorgeous little home in the suburbs of an Eastern city. From babyhood the children are being trained for the stage. Both she and he would rage with indignation if anything concerning their private lives was written about in any newspaper, so this cannot be "news."

IN a small New England settlement, not many miles from New York, the post-office has for some years been presided over by the daughter of the town drunkard, Lillie by name. Regularly her delicate fingers have assorted the noon and evening mails and she has been present from early morning until 7 p. m. to pass a stamp to any customer through the little wired window of the cage that Uncle Sam provided for her. Until a year ago her record for faithful attendance upon official duties was perfect, and then, to the astonishment of the villagers, she took a week off for a vacation in New York. When Lillie returned she appeared to be the same good little public servant, and although she was silent about her travels nothing was thought of it because she is by habit taciturn. Observant citizens, however, soon noted that she began to go to her work very early in the morning and return to her home after the shades of night had fallen. People said Lillie was overworking.

Lillie was taken suddenly ill a few weeks ago. Dr. Smithkins attended her late one night. The next day her father told intimates at the general store that his daughter's life had been ruined and that if she would tell him (which she steadfastly refused to do) the name of the scoundrelly father of her nameless child, why he'd hunt him down and sink lead into his vitals. He brags like that, does Lillie's father. In suppressed tones the women of the community told each other and their husbands that Lillie had a baby. The children found it out almost as soon. Lillie, of all people, an unwed mother! Poor thing, what should she, what could she do? The flour and feed man and his wife spent one whole night praying for Lillie and her little boy. Miss Edna, the organist and choir leader, appeared on Main Street with a swollen face and admitted that she had wept all night. Mrs. Botherem declared that when she passed the post-office it had seemed to her that she had seen a scarlet crepe hanging on the door. A few practical, motherly women dropped in at Lillie's house during the day and reported that mother and child were doing as well as could be expected. Lillie had nothing to say. She had been very ill, but had no word of complaint. She even seemed happy with the baby. Two weeks ago the post-mistress went back to work, in time to assort the morning mail. She wheeled little Jim to the post-office in a new buggy, covered by a fleecy robe and a fly-net. Every day since then she has done this. After school the children troop into the post-office for the mail and sing out, "How's the baby, Lillie?" And she replies with the stereotyped, "Just as good as gold." Little Jim is acknowledged by white-aproned experts to be quite the prettiest child the village has sheltered in years and—oh, so good, never cries at the post-office by day and sleeps from sun-set to sun-rise. Lillie goes on handing out the mail and the stamps saying nothing but pleasant "how-dos" and "good-byes." And that's all there is about the matter. It isn't news, and as old Jim isn't going to sink any lead, and as the K. K. K. isn't going to flog, and as Lillie has no mill-pond notions, and as there will be no pulpit denouncement, and as the pillory and the scarlet letter are no longer legal implements of torture in New England, and as Lillie wants the post-office job and the town wants her to have it, and for other reasons having to do with the phenomena of changing thought on moral questions, there isn't going to be any "news" about Lillie and Little Jim.

FORMS RIVAL BOOSTER GROUP

"Boosters of Oklahoma" Organized by K. C. Shelburne, Agency Man

Formation of "Boosters of Oklahoma," by K. C. Shelburne, of the Shelburne Advertising Agency and associates, Oklahoma City, is seen as a move to launch a rival organization to "Oklahomans, Inc." Shelburne, H. C. Whitten, an attorney, and Joe Whitten, his brother, incorporated the concern recently.

Shelburne formerly handled the advertising for Oklahomans, Inc. W. S. Key, former general manager, announced the contract was broken. Later Shelburne brought suit against the state advertising concern for $7,500.

The purpose of the new organization is to advertise the state, Shelburne said.

W. B. Estes, formerly a Chamber of Commerce secretary in Florida, has been named general manager of Oklahomans, Inc., by the board of directors, succeeding Mr. Key.

The directors voted to raise the money needed for the organization the coming year without outside help. A budget of $500,000 annually for the next three years is planned.

A nation wide publicity and advertising campaign is to be conducted.

PERKINS HEADS A. P. GROUP

Baltimore Man Chairman of Maryland-Delaware Association

A. W. Perkins of the Baltimore American and News has been elected chairman of the Maryland-Delaware district of the Associated Press. A. T. Newberry, chief of the Baltimore office, has been elected secretary. These officers serve for the ensuing year.

At the annual meeting, held in Baltimore a few days ago, Baltimore was selected as district headquarters. The members were invited by the Every Evening of Wilmington, Del., to hold the next annual meeting in that city, when they will have an opportunity to inspect Every Evening's new building. The invitation was accepted.

NEW CARTOON "MEN-U"

C. R. Macauley, who until recently was drawing cartoons for the New York Evening Graphic, has started a cartoon column in the New York American. Prepared somewhat in menu form the column carries the title "Men-U Know in the News." Macauley became a cartoonist in 1891 when he won a prize for cartooning offered by the Cleveland Press. He has worked for the Cleveland World, New York Herald, and New York World.

THIS REPORTER LIKES TO LIVE HIS STORIES

James B. Wharton Finds Life as Paris Correspondent Too Boring and Resigns to Try Out "Journeying Journalism"

"Journeying journalism" is what appeals to James B. Wharton. "Gay Paree" may fascinate all the rest of the world, but Mr. Wharton "will go elsewhere, thank you," he said this week in announcing his resignation as Paris correspondent of the North American Newspaper Alliance, effective October 1.

JAMES B. WHARTON

"I find the job of Paris correspondent too inactive for me," he explained.

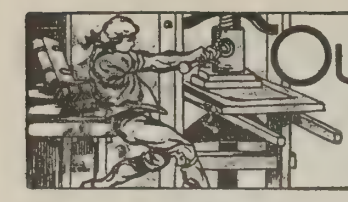
"I'm now going to try to do some journeying journalism on my own, like a reindeer journey through Lapland, a ride through Afghanistan, a sail among the Polynesian Islands, or something of that kind. I prefer to do myself what I'm going to write about."

Mr. Wharton has done quite a few things to write about. He is 30 now. Two years ago he wrote "hot" news from the North Pole when he was the only newspaper correspondent accompanying the Amundsen-Ellsworth airplane expedition to the top of the world. He wirelessed nearly 25,000 words over a three-months' period on this one story.

"I liked the Amundsen expedition," Wharton has said. "There 'I' formed one of the 'we' of the expedition, and that doesn't happen so very often down here in the civilization of Europe."

Mr. Wharton has been connected with the North American Newspaper Alliance since November, 1923, when he was sent to Berlin by the N.A.N.A. He made a 36-hour non-stop flight in the old ZR 3, now the Los Angeles, before it left Friedrichshafen on its trans-Atlantic flight in October, 1924. It was Mr. Wharton who was the ghost-author of Hans von Schiller's by-line story on the flight of the ZR 3 which was dropped beside the Statue of Liberty in New York harbor. The N.A.N.A. story was in print in the New York Evening World before the airship had reached Lakehurst.

When the rotorship Buckau made its first cargo voyage between Danzig and the Firth of Forth, Scotland, in February, 1925, Mr. Wharton was the sole correspondent aboard. In 1926 this young Paris correspondent signed a contract with Queen Marie of Rumania for her journalistic output in America, making Her Majesty her own reporter during the autumn of 1926.



Wharton started newspaper work on the old Philadelphia Press, remaining with that newspaper until it was purchased by Cyrus H. K. Curtis and merged with the Public Ledger. After a short time on the Public Ledger, he went to New York and worked as police reporter on the New York World. Returning later to the Public Ledger, he was assistant dramatic editor of that paper until he left to join the N.A.N.A.

RESWICK GETS A. P. POST

Named Moscow Correspondent Succeeding Late W. C. Whiffin

William Reswick has been appointed Moscow correspondent of the Associated Press, succeeding Walter C. Whiffen, who died recently. Reswick is now abroad and will assume his new duties immediately.

Reswick is a former New York newspaper man. He attended Law school in New York, and also free-lanced for several of the papers. He has worked in Russia and Germany for the New York American and has also been assistant in A. P. offices in London and Paris.

Our Own World of Letters

By JAMES MELVIN LEE

THE late Frank I. Cobb, when editor of the New York World, seldom wrote anything except for the page over which he presided. Only two exceptions come to mind. The first, an article which he contributed to The Atlantic Monthly for November, 1921, detailed the shocking expenditures still made for war purposes even when humanity had for its guidance the example of the Great War; the second, published in Harper's Magazine for June, 1923, showed how all the self-governing nations that emerged from the World War fashioned their constitutions in favor of a Parliamentary Government instead of a Congressional Government.

Walter Lippmann, Cobb's immediate successor on the editorial page of the World, often seeks a wider audience through frequent contributions to American periodicals. In "Men of Destiny" (The MacMillan Company) he has brought together with only slight revision some of the papers which he had previously contributed to The Atlantic Monthly, Foreign Affairs, Harper's Magazine, The New Republic, The Saturday Review of Literature, Vanity Fair, and The Yale Review.

Many of the points made by Mr. Lippmann are driven home with greater force because of the cartoons which head each chapter. These wordless editorials from the pen of Rollin Kirby admirably supplement the text by Mr. Lippmann.

The sketches in this volume are not all of a political nature. They have a social and literary interest as well. For Mr. Lippmann believes that H. L. Mencken and Sinclair Lewis are as significant figures in America today is is Al Smith, or any other outstanding political character of the time. These sketches, extending from March, 1916, to June, 1927, cover a wide variety of topics ranging from the availability of Al Smith as candidate to the Presidency down to a discussion of Mr. Bryan's seeming change of front in the startling and sensational "monkey" trial at Dayton, Tenn.

The book opens with the sketch, "Al Smith: A Man of Destiny." "Governor Smith is the first man of the new immigration who by every professed standard of American politics is completely available as a candidate for President," says Mr. Lippmann.

Then why the opposition to his nomination? Here is a man who "is not a pacifist, nor a radical, and not what the more ignorant members of the Senate call an internationalist; he has no designs on the institution of matrimony, he does not read free verse, he probably never heard of Freud, and if you inquired closely you would probably find that he did not accept the revelation according to Darwin."

The fact that Governor Smith is against prohibition and for free speech, that he belongs to Tammany Hall, even the religious issue—these do not sufficiently explain why he is not an available candidate for the nomination. "The availability of Al Smith is glaring, indisputable, overwhelming," says Mr. Lippmann. "And yet he is unavailable. By the unspoken and unwritten law of the United States, as it stands today, he cannot be nominated by any national party."

Mr. Lippmann gives two reasons for this seeming paradox. The first is that Smith represents the urban districts in its efforts to gain power over the rural. And seemingly the time has not yet come when this may come about. But the big reason, I might say the real reason, is to be found in the first ten words quoted from this chapter: "Governor Smith is the first man of the new immigration."

The fiction has long existed that in this country all men are equal, that all careers are open to talent. Al Smith is the first man who could and who has challenged this accepted precept, and in so doing he has brought into the open the conflict "between the tradition which Americans have professed and the tradition upon which they really intend to act."

The matter of the Catholicism of Al Smith is treated more fully in a chapter by itself. There Mr. Lippmann takes the opportunity of discussing both Mr. Marshall's open letter in The Atlantic and Mr. Smith's reply. With these two documents all readers are familiar. But Mr. Lippmann's views, I venture to say, may not be so widely known.

Another chapter of great general interest is the one in which Mr. Lippmann explains satisfactorily, for himself at least, the "why" of President Coolidge's being the present incumbent of the highest political office in the United States.

Inactivity is a political philosophy and a party program with Mr. Coolidge, according to Mr. Lippmann. But one should not mistake Mr. Coolidge's genius for inactivity; for it is a "grim, determined and alert inactivity."

There have been Presidents in our time who knew how to whip up popular enthusiasm. There has never been Mr. Coolidge's equal in the art of deflating interest. He has brought his technique to such perfection that one paper announced the conclusion of the coal strike in streamer headlines, saying "Coolidge Wins Coal Victory; Denies He Interfered."

And it is because this "active inactivity" suits the mood and certain needs of the country admirably at the present time that Calvin Coolidge has a great mass of the people behind him.

Then too, our President is the embodiment of Puritanism. We, the American people, while indulging in an orgy of pleasure have set up in the White House "this frugal little man who in his personal life is the very antithesis of the flamboyant ideal that everybody is frantically pursuing" so that we may enjoy vicariously "the classic virtues while continuing to enjoy all the modern conveniences."

In the chapter, "Bryan and The Dogma of Majority Rule," Mr. Lippmann shows that Bryan's stand in the matter of the Dayton trial was not a change of front but, after all, was consistent with his two life-long policies—majority rule and his belief in the sanctity of the text of the Bible. Then he goes on to discuss where and when the majority principle applies. Mr. Lippmann believes that Mr. Bryan did a service to democratic thinking when he "reduced to absurdity the dogma which had been held carelessly but almost universally, thus demonstrating that it was time to reconsider the premises of the democratic faith."

It is somewhat of a novelty to have the tables reversed while Mr. Lippmann analyzes for the reader that enigmatic personality, H. L. Mencken, in a sketch reviewing Mencken's "Notes on Democracy." Mr. Lippmann's comments about Mr. Mencken supply some of the most interesting material in this book full of entertaining, instructive and clear thinking chats on some of the leading personalities of the last decade.

In trying to answer the question why Mr. Mencken is as popular as he is in a country "in which he professes to dislike most of the population," Mr. Lippmann says:

> Mr. Mencken is so effective just because his appeal is not from mind to mind but from viscera to viscera.

Then again the author says:

> He writes terribly unjust tirades, and yet I know of nobody who writes for his living will stay up so late or get up so early to untangle an injustice.

Perhaps one of the most expressive cartoons is the one heading this chapter which shows Mencken yelling through a huge megaphone the single word "Boob" at the unlucky object of one of his vituperative attacks.

NEA Offers Magazine Supplement—"Babby Gerty" New Comic of International Syndicate—Hazel Deyo Batchelor Writes Latest Serial for Ledger

NEA SERVICE will start issuing a new weekly magazine section beginning Nov. 6. Peter Edson, formerly of the Boston Post and the New Haven Register will be managing editor. Early numbers will be under the personal supervision of Fred S. Ferguson, president of NEA. Covers will be drawn regularly by Ethel Hays.

PETER EDSON

In the first number a new fiction serial story by William Slavens McNutt will be started, and also the first of a series of articles on the modern girl by Helen Wills.

Staff members of the magazine will include: Eleanor Crockett, also director of the food bureau of the New York Telegram, who will conduct a similar department for the magazine; Paul Kroesen, illustrator; George Clarke and Virginia Maxwell, formerly connected with other syndicates.

A new addition to the feature list of the International Syndicate, Baltimore, is called "Gabby Gertie." It is a single column wisecracking comic, drawn and written by Irma Harms.

"The Ten Modern Commandments" is a movie adaptation of a story by Jack Lait, editor of International Feature Service, which appeared in the Chicago Herald & Examiner in 1921. The story was originally called "Penniless Millions."

"The Girl Who Played Safe" is the title of the the latest serial by Hazel Deyo Batchelor, offered by the Ledger Syndicate, Philadelphia.

Dr. Louis E. Bisch, neuropsychiatrist, hereafter will write a daily article for the Newspaper Feature Service daily magazine page. Hitherto he has been writing only two articles a week.

McNaught Syndicate has moved from the 15th floor of the New York Times Building and now occupies the entire 22nd floor of the same building.

Metropolitan Newspaper Service is offering a series of eight articles on the perils and problems of allied counter-espionage during the world war. Charles Lucieto, of the French secret service, is the author.

Leslie Fulenwider, president of Famous Features Syndicate, New York, returned Monday from a two months' business trip through Europe. While there he obtained a signed story by Mme. Helene Lupescu detailing her romance with Prince Carol, and several other features. In Paris Mr. Fulenwider attempted to buy the airplane Columbia from Charles A. Levine and stage a flight to America under the auspices of Famous Features Syndicate, but the deal did not go through because of the legal entanglements which surrounded the Columbia at the time. On Mr. Fulenwider's return it was revealed that it was he who was responsibile for bringing Charles Levine and Capt. W. G. R. Hinchcliffe together.

Russ Westover, creator of "Tillie the Toiler," has returned from a trip through the West. He visited his old home in San Francisco.

Rudolph Block, comic art editor, short story and editorial writer, has just returned from Europe.

John P. Medbury, King Features Syndicate humorist, is engaged in writing his first serial, entitled "Blazing Bunions." It is a satire on current newspaper fiction.

Helen Rowland, author of "Meditations of a Married Woman" and "The Sayings of Mrs. Solomon," is enjoying her first vacation in seven years. She is at Shoreham, Long Island.

Jack Callahan, creator of "Freddie the Sheik," has taken up aviation and has moved down on Long Island to be near the flying field.

W. L. Wardell, Zoë Beckley, and D. S. Garden, of Famous Features Syndicate, New York, went to Ottawa last week to obtain special features on the flight of the St. Raphael, bearing Princess Lowenstein-Wertheim, which apparently went down at sea in its scheduled flight from England to Canada.

"Pre-eminent" articles released by Metropolitan Newspaper Service for the next month will include: "The Charm of Uncertainty," by Wallace Irwin; "Why This Pomp," by Richard Washburn Child; "Woman's Increasing Power—Man In A Woman's State," by Gertrude Atherton; and "Using Your Other Mind," by Harvey O'Higgins.

Charles McManus has returned from a trip to the Canadian Rockies and California.

"FIRST NIGHTERS" ELECT

Gilbert Gabriel, dramatic critic of the New York Sun, has been elected president of the "First Nighters," an organization of New York play reviewers. The club was organized by Kelcey Allen, of Women's Wear, a daily trade paper.

Thomas Cook & Sons Advertise Delux Aerial Tour to Dempsey-Tunneyy Fight—Atlas Powder to Use Newspapers—Traffic Group Wants Speed Talk Cut from Auto Ads

A PROMISE of a new source of newspaper advertising appeared in the copy placed in Eastern dailies this week by Thomas Cook & Sons asking for customers to make a delux aerial tour to the Dempsey-Tunney fight in Chicago, Sept. 22.

The tourist agency was working in co-operation with the Reynolds Airways, Inc. The Cook company hopes some day soon to be selling Americans airplane journeys with the ease that this modern form of transportation is sold on the Continent.

The Atlas Powder Company of Wilmington, Del., will use newspaper space this year in a campaign due to start in the near future.

The Better Traffic Committee of Pittsburgh has appealed to automobile manufacturers, asking them to abandon the practice of emphasizing high speed in their advertising campaigns. The committee places part of the responsibility for the increase of traffic fatalities directly to this type of automotive copy.

Sir Thomas Lipton has resigned the chairmanship of his English tea business, Thomas J. Lipton, Ltd., and will hereafter hold the title of honorary life president. Sir John Ferguson has been appointed chairman.

The National Better Business Bureau reports that 19 companies producing about 90 per cent of the building insulation materials made in this country, have pledged themselves to a code of fair play in advertising and selling representations.

The Monroe Auto Equipment Manufacturing Company, of Monroe, Mich., manufacturers of Monroe hydraulic shock eliminators and forced draft heaters, has appointed Austin F. Bement, Inc., Detroit and Chicago, as its advertising agency. The Detroit office of the Bement agency will place the campaign.

Modernmode Footwear, recent addition to Fifth Avenue's shoe shops, New York, is placing advertising through the Arthur Rosenberg Company.

The H. K. McCann Company has been appointed to handle the advertising of the Broadmoor Hotel, Colorado Springs.

BRITISH JOURNALISTS ELECT BLUMENFELD

Editor of London Express Named President of Institute—Correspondence Schools for Reporters Denounced

By ALLAN DELAFONS

(Special to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

LONDON.—By a unanimous vote the delegates assembled at Reading on Aug. 30 for the annual conference of the British Institute of Journalists, under the presidency of Charles Igglesden, passed a resolution to the effect that "no Fellow or Member of the Institute of Journalists shall be associated with any school of journalism, or with any other course of education in journalism that has not been approved by the Council of the Institute."

P. E. Verstone, editor of The Paper Container, proposed the motion, and read advertisements promising large amounts that might be earned after a little postal tuition in journalism. H. A. Taylor, of Newspaper Features, a syndicate, London, and chairman of the executive body of the institute, also urged that the institute should warn the public against the absurd claims made by many so-called schools of journalism. Other delegates pointed out that courses in journalism in connection with some of the universities in England were well worthy of the support and recommendation of the institute, and the motion was passed unanimously.

On the afternoon of Aug. 30 R. D. Blumenfeld, editor-in-chief of the London Daily Express, was elected president of the Institute of Journalists for 1928. He had not, Mr. Blumenfeld said, been an active member of their organization, though he had actually been a member for many years, but he hoped to be able to do some useful work during his year of office.

The institute has been reorganized, and a large increase in membership was reported. The standing orders have been revised and brought into accord with modern ideas in journalism, and the consideration of these alterations occupied much of the time and the four business sessions of the conference, on Aug. 29, 30 (two sessions) and Sept. 1.

On Tuesday, Sept. 6, Sir G. Rowland Blades, Bart., master printer and Lord Mayor of London, journeyed to Ipswich and there formally opened Oak Hill, the convalescent and rest home given by a Member of Parliament and citizen of Ipswich to the Institute of Journalists. The institute is raising a fund, to which most of the leading newspapers in England and many Australian newspapers are subscribing, to maintain Oak Hill as a home of rest for journalists, whether members of the Institute or otherwise.

KRAEMER PROMOTED

Urban J. Kraemer, manager of department store advertising for the Cleveland Press, has resigned and gone to Baltimore to become advertising manager for the Baltimore Post.

LESS DRINKING AT MEETS

Hardened Delegate Finds Hard-Liquor Losing Its Popularity

Prohibition is finally being felt at conventions of advertising and newspaper publishing organizations, a man who attends a large number of such affairs remarked this week.

"At a recent convention," this observer reported, "a gentleman I know brought his usual two suitcases of liquor. He left without opening either suitcase. Three years ago at the same convention I remember there were marked appearances of conviviality.

"At another convention the other day a man produced a quart bottle of Scotch at the annual banquet. He passed it around with the offer of 'help yourself'." The bottle went to four tables, a total of 32 men, and came back to the owner unopened.

"'I know its good stuff,' the owner said, "but even he didn't pull the cork."

C. S. BAUR HONORED

Charles S. Baur, general advertising manager of the Iron Age, was tendered a testimonial dinner Thursday evening, Sept. 1, in honor of the completion of 25 years of service with the publication. The affair was held at the home of F. J. Frank, Pleasantville, N. Y., president of the Iron Age Publishing Company.

TO EXPAND PLANT

Expansion of the plant of the Albany (N. Y.) Times-Union is indicated by the approval of a building permit involving an expenditure of $30,000 for improvements and alterations.

PACIFIC FLIGHTS TEST HAWAIIAN NEWS MEN

and questions. Another stream of rumors to be chased down, with the possibility that any of them might be true, might lead to the finding of a plane and crew, might "break" the biggest rescue story of the year.

There is still a possibility the lost aviators will be picked up, and that is what makes the Honolulu newspapers and correspondents hold their breath with mingled hope and apprehension. Hope that it may be true, that a rescue may be effected; apprehension that the story may "break" for someone else, that the "scoop" may be landed by the other fellow.

Every ship that comes in from the sea, every fisherman's sampan that glides into the harbor from its lonely cruises out over the shoals and banks, needs watching.

One such report has already set the world athrill—and then brought disappointment and shock. A country correspondent on the island of Maui sent to the Honolulu Advertiser a report that the Pedlar plane (Miss Doran) had been found and all on board taken off. A newspaper extra, and a press association's story flashed to the mainland, caused a sensation soon dispelled by the facts. The Associated Press and the Star-Bulletin, already investigating the first rumor, were doubtful of its authenticity and sent a staff man, stationed on the island of Maui for just such protection, on a long night automobile ride to the lonely little village on the Maui coast mentioned in the rumor. The staff man found there was nothing in it.

This is only one of many rumors which have come in from the "outside islands." And it is the possibility that any may be true that is keeping the newspapers and correspondents on edge, long after the chances are 1,000 to 1 against the survival of any of the seven persons who are missing.

The writer hopes that no mainland newspaper will take it from the foregoing that we down here are complaining about the work or objecting because big news is coming our way. Not at all. We've had an unforgettable illustration of the fact that though Hawaii is geographically remote from the mainland, news today halts not for space and reckons with time only as it is an urgent factor.

No newspaper man going through the past few weeks here could think of Hawaii as isolated. We've been shooting wireless and cable news through to you for editions just as if we were phoning in from a few miles away to a rewrite man. We've seen how papers from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast are calling for special stories, and we've watched the picture men race each other by airplane, auto and the well-known feet to get their stuff off first for the mainland—just as if their offices were 50 miles away instead of at least 2,100.

And perhaps the most interesting thing was the demonstration that it's possible to cover the distance from the Pacific coast to Hawaii in approximately 24 hours—and do it safely. In spite of the fact that three planes are missing (at this writing) four planes have covered the distance this summer, and three of the four came through without difficulty. All of them brought letters and messages, and some of them also brought mainland papers.

Meanwhile, if any of you brothers of the craft have a lingering idea that the life here is one of ease and quietude under the rustling palms—come down here and go through a "flight story" with us.

CONSOLIDATION

The merging of newspaper interests is a subject that has received special study and investigation by this firm for nearly 17 years. It is a big subject and requires considerable technical knowledge, both as to valuation and operating methods. When properly organized, the results are never disappointing.

We have been factors in many important consolidations, sales and appraisals.

MORE than 8,000,000 sportmen have licenses to hunt and fish. Soon the great exodus to the wide open spaces will be on. Why not put on a local once-a-week department on your sport page with news and gossip about local hunters, hunting places, yarns and features, together with special advertising from sporting goods stores and manufacturers who cater to the sportsman? Are you overlooking this bet? If so, remember it might make a good Saturday morning space-seller.—James M. Mosely, Boston.

"Around the Loud Speaker." The advent of radio has brought sewing into its own again. Women may sew at home while listening in. Get a page of ads from department stores, notions and drygoods establishments, and other places which feature things to make—laces, embroideries, patterns, sewing material, etc. —C. M. L.

"Free Demonstrations In Your Home" could be the heading over a page or spread of ads of local concerns handling washing machines, radios, ironers, phonographs and all other articles which are demonstrated in the homes and this could be put on with a "Free Demonstration" week which could be widely advertised.—F. H. W.

A drygoods store of the better class in any Junior College, University or Girls' School town could use to advantage this advertising scheme which has netted one firm a good many extra accounts. Through newspaper advertisements and letters to the various sorority members, one store suggests that when a purchase is made, the girl get a receipt bearing her name and the name of her sorority. Alumnæ members living in the town have the same privilege. At the end of the term or semester the sorority having done the most business with that particular store is presented with $200 in trade or cash, the second with $100, etc. This is one more chance for keen rivalry between organizations, and at least one store has found that it pays.—Thora Eigenmann.

The Utica (N. Y.) Observer-Dispatch sold six columns of advertising, in one issue, comprising a "directory of drug stores," under the heading of "Utica Qualified Pharmacies." Some of the stores used only one inch, while some went in for much bigger space.—C-W.

HUNCHES

One Dollar will be paid for each idea published. Send clipping for payment.

THE Worcester (Mass.) Sunday Telegram is printing pictures without identification, of stone markers and other landmarks in surrounding territory, and offering to pay $1 for what the editor considers the best brief history of the subject of the photograph, and the route to be taken from Worcester to reach it. —L. D. Chamberlain, Worcester.

The St. Paul Sunday Pioneer Press, has run a long series on Fathers and Sons in Business. In each Sunday story they tell of a business operated by a father in which the son has later become a partner or successor and the history of the concern. It is used in the business section with photographs.—R. F. H.

Postmaster General New announces that direct mail advertisers waste $633,428.35 annually by their failure to have their return mail cards on the mail matter. What has your postoffice to say about this matter and how much does it contribute to the country-wide total? The above figure applies only to those who mailed their circulars first class; the figure for the third class matter is even larger but there is no record kept.—D. P.

Now that the presidential campaign begins to get under way, a welcome guide to politically-minded readers would be a series of brief biographical sketches of men who are likely to be considered as presidential possibilities. These fingernail biographies might also include the men under consideration for state and local offices.—Z. P. Wilkins.

I found while editing a weekly that a column I called "Before You Knew Them" was popular. It contained accounts of residents who had passed a considerable part of their lives in some other place. These stories were written with a rather light touch, ran to a half or three-quarters of a column and never went beyond the time of their subjects' arrival in the town. It was by no means difficult to obtain the data from the subjects themselves.—Cora B. Johnson.

Aviation is a live topic today. Localize it by making a state or sectional survey of landing fields—information which can be easily obtained from national guard officers as well as from commercial pilots. In addition to using the field locations in a chart, conditions, size of field and improvements completed or projected, can be outlined.—R. F. H.

A. W. Hopkins of the Wisconsin College of Agriculture says that attractive farm names which are appropriately chosen may help develop a sense of pride about the farm which is often reflected in an increased effort toward the production of higher quality products and in the end toward better marketing. Are the farms in your county named? There's a good story in it. You can help the cause along by letting the farmers know farm names may be protected by recording with the Register of Deeds.—R. E. Dietz.

There will perhaps be some American Legion member from your town or nearby who has left for the convention in Paris. When he gets back, line him up for a series of articles or interviews on his trip and the convention.—L. G. Cutler.

Interview your librarian, the head of your public library on the subject of "Theft of books, type taken, when taken, and sort of people suspected." You will find a very interesting story and the publicity of this evil will do much to help prevent it.—C. E. Pellissier.

43 YEARS ON DAILY

"Bob" Newton, veteran printer, has just completed 43 years with the Providence (R. I.) Journal, observing at the same time his 60th birthday. Recalling the first issue of the Providence Sunday Journal, Newton said that printers and apprentices worked overtime for two months setting 18 pages of type by hand. Printers at first laughed at the typesetting machines and refused to use them. According to Newton, the foreman told him on the occasion of the first 12-page issue of the Bulletin, "Bob, that's the biggest paper you will ever see." Oftentimes now the paper is four times that size.

Check up— On New England—

IF you are looking for more sales—more distribution—check up on New England. You will find this is the market to concentrate on at this time. Industry is running full blast, employment is plentiful and earning power is unusually high.

For instance, at the present time, the Haverhill Shoe Manufacturers are launching a carefully prepared sales campaign, their motto being, "Planer Shoes and Better Shoemaking." The eighth annual shoe and leather exposition held in Boston, July 5, 6, 7, showed a registration of 3200 buyers. General Electric Co. of Lynn, Mass., reports that their production is now double what it formerly was. The Textile business is showing healthy increase during the present season. The Security Mills, Inc., of Newton, Mass., have started the construction of a new plant and are installing between 30 and 40 additional knitting machines. Pepperell Mfg. Co. are working at full capacity. At Biddeford, Maine, the main plant is running at 110% of capacity. Clinton, Mass., reports the opening of a silk spinning concern in their city, employing about 40 hands and running on a 24-hour a day basis. The International Wire Products Co. of Worcester, Mass., has purchased the shoe factory of Edward F. Brennan at Natick, Mass. Operations have already begun employing about 50 hands.

All these signs of activity show that business is exceptionally good in New England and it is the psychological moment for the national advertiser to bring his product before the attention of the consumer. The newspapers listed below are behind this prosperity. They can help you in your advertising.

The Figures for New York

Evening Newspapers

THE largeness and the compactness of the New York market offers advertisers the unusual advantage of maximum sales opportunities with minimum distribution handicaps.

The density of population and the density of retail outlets makes New York an unusually profitable and economical market to cultivate. No other market has as many stores per square mile or as many consumers per square mile. No other market has as many customers per store. No other market has as complete a rapid transit system. All of which lowers the cost of securing retail distribution and the cost of securing consumer sales.

In addition to its own huge population, New York has a daily visiting population of 130,000 people who come from all parts of the country to see and to buy. They carry home the impression gained in New York. Products used in New York homes, sold in New York stores and advertised in New York newspapers soon find their way into many other important markets.

To advertisers who want to determine the most effective medium for developing this fertile market, the figures below will be useful. They indicate which evening newspaper in New York has been found to be most productive.

"ABOUT BROADWAY"
By Mark Hellinger

"THE SAY-SO OF HOLLERAN YELL"
By Westbrook Pegler

Let them win and hold CIRCULATION for you!

BROADWAY — where the chorus girl looks like a waitress and the waitress looks like a chorus girl, where the bootlegger looks like a minister, where your barber dresses like the Count of Godknowswhat, where mothers look like young daughters and young daughters look like grandmothers. . . .

MARK HELLINGER

Everyone is interested in Broadway. Life is less humdrum when one can read of night clubs, actresses, prize fighters, song writers, society, nobility, notorious doormen, waiters, prohibition! "ABOUT BROADWAY" by Mark Hellinger is extraordinarily alive and personal. In jaded New York where the cup of Broadway gossip overflows, his spicy, informal comment about the personalities of Broadway's night life has caused a stir!

The articles are opulent with pictures of those in the limelight.

WESTBROOK PEGLER

WESTBROOK PEGLER is established as one of the country's favorite sports writers. In the weekly feature, THE SAY-SO of HOLLERAN YELL, a coarse, hearty ex-fight manager describes in pungent style his vivid career as lord and master of a "stable of bums." His very novel moral contentions are supported by logical stories in point. His extreme hesitancy to separate himself from any "resources" is as comically serious as his insistence on high ideals in all his dealings—when advantageous to himself. For funny situations—tinged with expressive pugilistic lingo — give your readers THE SAY-SO of HOLLERAN YELL!

Every article is complete and accompanied by an illustration by the clever young cartoonist, Ferd Johnson. Wire for rates and proofs!

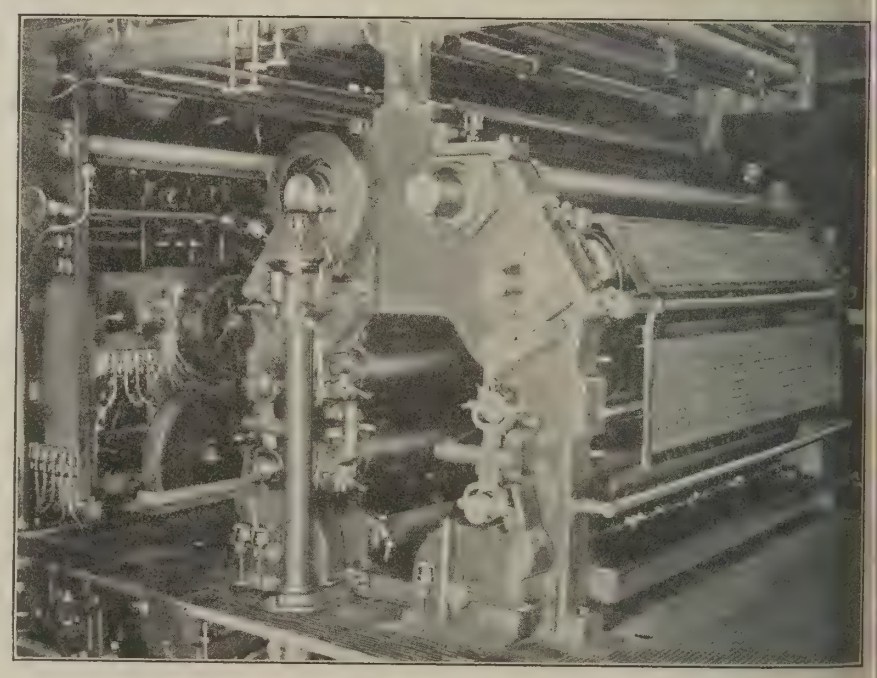
POURING OIL
ON TROUBLED PRESSES



MUCH trouble in your press room may be caused, not only by the use of an improper oil, but by an inefficient lubrication system in the presses.

Scott "Multi-Unit" and "Straight-Unit" Presses are oiled as presses never have been oiled before. There is, for instance, automatic lubrication for all important bearings. All oil reservoirs are above the floor. Each oil feed is individually adjustable and oil is filtered automatically while feeding.

There are, moreover, shut offs to save oil when the presses stop and to feed "slugs" of oil when opened for starting. This does not affect the adjustment for feeding the correct amount of oil when running, while provision is also made for quick flooding by hand oiling when desired.

Finally, each press bears a plate specifying just what oils to use for different bearings. To eliminate all lubrication troubles in your press room, install—

Selling FOODS
in the World's Greatest Market

The New York Herald Tribune carried more food advertising for the first eight months of 1927 than any other New York morning newspaper.

• • • •

For the first eight months of 1927, the gains of the New York Herald Tribune in food advertising exceeded the combined gains of all the other New York morning newspapers.

The reason for the large volume carried and the large gains made by the Herald Tribune in food advertising is that the Herald Tribune sells foods. No other newspaper in New York possesses such a rich home background for food sales. For eleven years the Herald Tribune Institute has been doing important educational work in home economics and has become a guide in food matters to Herald Tribune readers.

Another step in this work is the series of Cooking and Home-Making Schools to be conducted this fall by Miss Jessie M. DeBoth under the direction of the Herald Tribune Institute. Thousands of housewives will attend these schools held in three boroughs of New York City and in Westchester County and food products and household appliances conforming to the standards of the Institute will be shown in actual use to women eager for authoritative information.

Dayton Shopping News Starts Conflict Between Newspapers and Merchants

Publishers' United Action in Refusing Copy from Large Store Followed by Withdrawal of 15 Others, Four of Which Return—Handbill Ordinance Invoked to Stop Distribution of Store Circular

By PHILIP SCHUYLER

AYTON, O., Sept. 21.—Twelve local merchants, spending an estimated 0,000 annually in newspaper space, ae discontinued their advertising in the e Dayton, O., newspapers, the Daily os, the Herald and the Journal, in an dertising war precipitated by the pro- ed publication of a Dayton Shopping os, scheduled to start as a weekly 12- ae circular on Saturday of this week.

.dvertising was withdrawn by these l merchants Sept. 14, after the papers refused the copy of one store known e an advocate of the Shopping News. ixteen merchants were originally in recalcitrant advertiser group, but by dnesday this week four had weakened had returned to patronize again the e dailies, the managements of which e confident that the back of the boy- was broken and that even if the pping News is issued, as it undoubt- will be on Sept. 24, it will be short- d, dying by its creators' own hands.

he newspaper men base their confi- ece on an early demise for this newest local advertising handbills on several nts distinctly in their favor.

1 the first place, the papers, the News, ned by ex-Governor James M. Cox, the Herald and Journal, owned by bassador Myron T. Herrick and E. G. kam, have for virtually the first time their warring histories forgotten all erences, political, business and other- e, to form a local publishers' associa- to combat continuance of the Shop- g News which they frankly fear. viously a union scale meeting was the event which would bring Dan J. honey, general manager of the News, Ralph M. Jones, general manager of Journal and Herald, together to fight edly for a cause. Before formation the publishers' association, there was old-time bitter newspaper competi- in Dayton.

While the papers are now thus organ- l, the merchants have as yet no cor- ate organization to lend cohesion to Shopping News venture, which they upon merely as supplemental to spaper advertising. and replacing er billboards and direct mail. As a ter of fact, the president of the local il association, which is a branch of Dayton Chamber of Commerce, is aining loyal to the dailies and has not eed to patronize the Shopping News. those actively interested in the weekly dbill idea as an advertising medium e solicited independently by the Shop- s' Publications, Inc., a Detroit or- ization, which has sent F. C. Roder- to Dayton as manager, and is plan- g, if successful here, to push similar erprises in other likely cities of Ohio Indiana.

he fact that an "outsider" in the busi- s for profit for himself is concerned considered advantageous to the news- er men, who point to the fact that the eland Shopping News and the Detroit opping News are operated by the mer- nts themselves as mutual non-profit making publications. The Dayton publishers feel that it will be easier for them to arouse public feeling against an outlander and that also it will be a difficult matter for the company in question to keep the merchants interested continuously in a Shopping News in which they themselves have no capital invested. It is also felt in newspaper circles that the Shopping News will meet with difficulty in getting printed in Dayton, even though the company has announced already who will do the job work required.

Finally the newspapers are sure that the merchants will speedily realize that better results are obtained from advertisements placed in paid-for newspapers with reader-interest than from a free medium, which, published Saturdays, can at best only stimulate Monday's sales. In particular the Dayton publishers point out that Monday's sales have long been neglected by two of the city's biggest department stores, which have never bought space in the Dayton Sunday papers. These two big stores will pay the bulk of the Shopping News bill, as until now they together have spent $250,000 annually in the week-day papers.

Spokesmen for the merchants told EDITOR & PUBLISHER that a Dayton Shopping News had been under consideration for several years. They insisted they had no intentions of cutting down their newspaper space. The publishers had instituted no increase in advertising rates unjustified by A. B. C. reports, and a friendly feeling existed between local advertisers and the daily media. The newspaper managers, however, Mr. Mahoney and Mr. Jones, were convinced that a Shopping News constituted a menace that must be quashed early in the game. The newspapers, therefore, forced the issue by turning down the copy of one of the chief supporters of the Shopping News, after this supporter had made it perfectly plain that they would carry through the handbill advertising program, whether the newspapers objected to it or not. Thus the battle lines were drawn.

The opening shot of the publishers was fired last Wednesday, Sept. 14. It was then that the advertising copy submitted by the Rike-Kumler store was refused by all three of the Dayton papers. At a meeting of the chamber of commerce directors the night before, a representative of this store had frankly declared that he would "not be dictated to by newspaper men." He was running his own business, and if he thought it a good investment to engage a flag pole sitter or buy space in a Shopping News, he would do it, and the newspapers could go hang. The Rike-Kumler store is one of two that spends approximately $250,000 in Dayton newspapers each year. The other big advertiser is Elder and Johnston Company.

In refusing the Rike-Kumler copy last Wednesday, the publishers let the store owners know that the paper would keep the copy out as long as the store continued to support the Shopping News. Immediately after this copy was refused and it was learned that it was to be kept out under an anti-Shopping News proviso, the newspaper managers were asked by the sixteen other stores individually to cancel their space.

No contractual agreements were involved by these cancellations, since, according to the newspaper managers, arrangements with local merchants were on an "over 2,000-inch and 5,000-inch a yearly minimum basis, and this agreed amount had been filled by all concerned long ago.

The stores that originally cancelled their advertising following what some of their number described to EDITOR & PUBLISHER as "the freezing out of the Rike-Kumler store," were:

The Mearick Cloak Company, Rossiter-Jarrett Furniture Company, Dayton Arcade Company, a food market; the Sterling Jewelry Company; The Miller Farrell Company, Kehm's Walk-Over Boot Shop; P. J. Myer, the Cappel Furniture Company; Thal's Fashion; the Gallaher Drug Company; Rogers & Co.; Parisian Silk Shop; Donenfeld's; Hademan's Sons Company; and the Elder & Johnston Company.

The four of the group that had come back to the newspapers by Wednesday were Thal's Fashion, Donenfeld's, the Sterling Jewelry Company and Rogers & Co. Three big stores remaining loyal from the beginning were, the Home store, Adler and Childs, and the Dayton Drygoods Company.

Three stores had signed with the Shopping News, but withdrew before the contest with the newspapers started. They were Crowls, the Anderson Piano Company, and the Wurlitzer Piano Company.

Profiting by the affair was the Dayton Weekly Labor Review, which was carrying Rike-Kumler advertising copy for the first time.

The company that is to publish the Dayton Shopping News beginning this Saturday, is, although a Detroit concern, only indirectly connected with the organization sponsoring the well known Detroit Shopping News of which Fred C. Veon is manager. As far as could be learned the only connection is that represented by royalties paid by the organization operating in Dayton for various copyrights held by the Detroit Shopping News.

The Shoppers' Publications, Inc., as it is called, is incorporated for $15,000, of which more than $12,000 has been paid in cash. The incorporators are: Wilfred Laurie, attorney for Grinnell Bothers Music Store of Detroit, president; H. W. Rapp, also of Grinnell Brothers, vice-president; Sheldon Smith, of the Provident Mortgage Company of Detroit, vice-president; Harry Bartlett, of the D. M. Ferry (Seed) Company of Detroit, treasurer. Other directors are: Allan Burnette of the D. M. Ferry Company; Wallace Hall, an attorney; F. C. Roderick, general manager; Leonard Grinnell, Lloyd Grinnell, H. A. Henderson, advertising manager of Grinnell Brothers; and W. L. Farenger of the Aetna Life Insurance Company.

The publication they intend to issue is admittedly patterned after the Detroit Shopping News. Mr. Roderick has promised the merchants to circulate 80,000 copies in Dayton, at an advertising rate which the merchants claim is lower than that charged by the newspapers as fixed on a circulation basis. The front page will be given over to the boxed announcements of special Monday bargains to be offered by all stores buying space on the inside pages. The subscribing merchants have pledged themselves to abide by a strict code of ethics, drawn up by the Better Business Bureau. Distribution will be by carrier boys between 14 and 16 years of age. Advertisements for boys posted in various department stores brought a big response, it is claimed, and Mr. Roderick's office, established in the building occupied by the Elder and Johnston Company, is confident it will circularize the 80,000 easily. The type is being set by the Dayton Labor Review, a weekly, and the copies

HIGH SPOTS OF DAYTON STORE WAR

MERCHANTS agree with Detroit promoters to establish Shopping News in Dayton.

Publishers of News and Journal and Herald unite in protesting against establishment of Shopping News.

Merchants declare that newspaper advertising will not be reduced; that Shopping News is intended to replace other media. They declare that they will not submit to dictation of their policies by newspapers.

Newspapers refuse to publish Sept. 14 copy of Rike-Kumler store. Other stores, calling the publishers' action a "freeze-out," withdraw their copy.

Four of stores returned to newspaper advertising by Wednesday, but preparations were made to issue Shopping News Sept. 24, a month before expected.

Publishers state that Shopping News cannot be distributed without violating local ordinance against circulars and handbills. A test case will be brought by the newspapers.

CHANGES IN AUDIT BUREAU REPORTS WILL BE CHIEF CHICAGO TOPIC

Managing Director Harn Asks Members to Have Suggestions Ready Which Will Make Forms of Greater Use to Advertisers and Agencies

CHANGES in the present reports of the Audit Bureau of Circulations to make them more useful to members is expected to be the principal order of business at the annual convention in Chicago, Oct. 20-21.

Managing Director O. C. Harn, who was in New York this week arranging convention details, discussed the matter as follows:

"Nothing has been subject of more widespread thought, apparently, among members of the Audit Bureau, than the desire to make the information gathered by the Bureau more easily and quickly available to users of the Bureau's reports. With the idea of accomplishing improvement in this direction, the board of directors desires to have the subject fully discussed in the divisional meetings of the October convention.

"A leader will be appointed for each division and concrete suggestions for the simplification of the forms will be solicited from the members present. Suggestions may be for physical arrangement, putting certain facts into just a position which are scattered in the present forms, or arranging the facts in more logical order, or even, in some instances, eliminating entirely unused or little used material.

"When the divisions have expressed themselves the board will digest the suggestions and make such changes in the form of the reports which may seem to best meet the needs of advertisers and agencies.

"Members who cannot attend the convention, but who have ideas on the subject are invited to send them in in advance of the meeting to the directors who represent their divisions, or to the headquarters in Chicago for passing on to the directors."

Plans are being completed by the various newspaper and advertising groups which will meet in Chicago during Advertising Week, Oct. 17-22.

The board of directors of the Association of Newspaper Advertising Executives will meet Oct. 19 in a private dining-room of the Stevens Hotel, in conjunction with the convention of the A. N. A. E. A luncheon in the north assembly room at the Stevens is on the A. N. A. E. program for Oct. 20. About 100 members are expected.

The Inland Daily Press association will hold its regular October meeting at the Morrison Hotel, Oct. 18 and 19. Final details of the Inland program were to be arranged by President John H. Harrison and Secretary Wil V. Tufford, in Chicago, Thursday, Sept. 22. Speakers and round-table discussions on various problems will be on the Inland program. The meeting will be divided into four sections—editorial, advertising, circulation and mechanical.

For the fourteenth annual convention of the Audit Bureau of Circulations to be held in Chicago October 20 and 21, all passenger associations of the United States and Canada have arranged to allow the attendants at the convention and their families the special rate of one and one-half fares for the round trips to and from Chicago, provided that at least 250 certificates are turned in by visitors upon their arrival at the convention headquarters at the Stevens Hotel. To assure the members of the reduced rates, the A. B. C. is sending out a questionnaire, to be returned to the bureau, giving each member's name, address, railroad to be used to the Convention, number in the party, and address while in Chicago. Certificates are to be obtained when tickets are purchased and presented to J. A. Austin, office manager, at the A. B. C. headquarters, room 457, Stevens Hotel, on the day of arrival in Chicago. P. L. Thomson and O. C. Harn are handling the details of the A. B. C. meeting, at which 600 to 800 delegates are expected

The Associated Business Papers, Inc., will have at least 250 members in Chicago for its convention at the Drake Hotel, October 17, 18 and 19, according to J. H. Bragdon, president. More than 125 business papers are members of the association.

Managers of the classified advertising departments of American newspapers will also assemble in Chicago to take an active part in Advertising Week. The program of this group calls for meetings on Oct. 18 and 19 at the Stevens. C. L. Perkins of the Chicago Herald & Examiner is president of the organization. The Chicago meeting is for officers, directors and members from Wisconsin, Illinois, Indiana and Michigan.

Another important gathering will be that of the National Conference of Business Paper Editors, who will hold a three-day conference Oct. 17 to 19 inclusive. Frank C. Wight, president of the organization, states that 250 to 300 editors will attend the conference, which will be held at the Drake.

Horace Klein, president of the Agricultural Publishers Association, announces that almost all of the association's members are expected to attend the annual meeting at the Drake, Oct. 19. Oct. 17 and 18, members of the Mail Advertising Service Association of North America will meet in Chicago.

The Better Letters Association and the Association of House Organ Editors, both affiliated with the Direct Mail Advertising Association, will hold their meetings at the Stevens, Oct. 20 and 21. A. B. McCallister, of Young & McCallister, Los Angeles, will preside over the meeting of the House Organ group.

The Insurance Advertising Conference of America on Oct. 17 and 18, and the National Association of Teachers of Marketing and Advertising, are two other groups which will take part in Advertising Week.

Climaxing the week will come the big international advertising exposition to be held by the Direct Mail Advertising Association, of which Charles R. Wiers is president. Three days, Oct. 19, 20 and 21, have been set aside for this convention, which is expected to draw an attendance of 3,000.

MERGING IOWA PAPERS

Kenneth R. Marvin, Ames, and Mortimer Goodwin, Chicago, will be owners of the Marengo (Ia.) Pioneer, owned by Fred M. Cook, and the Marengo Republican, published by James Farquhar and Emmett A. Moynihan, when merger of the papers under a partnership is completed this week.

NEW OKLAHOMA CAMPAIGN

State Chamber Will Have Advertising Budget of $150,000

The program for the Oklahoma State Chamber of Commerce, successor to Oklahomans, Inc., will be outlined at a state-wide meeting of members of the former organization and of the chambers of the state at Norman, Oct. 11, W. B. Estes, newly chosen manager, announces. Estes succeeds Col. W. S. Key as manager.

Newspapers and newspaper men, as well as chambers of commerce and other civic bodies, formed the Oklahomans, Inc. National advertising in newspapers and weekly magazines has brought hundreds of applications from all over the country, and from several foreign lands, to the state organization. A budget of $300,000 was authorized and partially spent.

The coming year's budget has been tentatively set at $150,000, to include newspaper advertising.

PRESS PRAISED FOR FIGHT AGAINST FRAUD

.. H. H. Simmons, President of Stock Exchange, Asks Newspapers to Continue Anti-Swindle Education—Gannett Cites Case of War for Truth

'HE part newspapers are playing in educating their readers on financial id investment matters, making the game the swindler and fraud specialist more fficult, was given high praise at the eventh annual convention of the ational Better Business Commission in ssion at the New York Bar Association ew York, Monday to Thursday of this eek.

The meeting was opened by President mes C. Auchincloss, and in attendance ere representatives of Better Business ureaus in 42 cities of the country, ureaus whose sole purpose is the unovering of fraud in business and in adertising.

Praise for the newspapers came from . H. H. Simmons, president of the New ork Stock Exchange, and one of the rincipal speakers.

"The press is performing a most saluary public function in spreading a nowledge of investment matters broadast through the land," Mr. Simmons aid. "The schools and colleges are likeise turning their attention to more laborate and technical instruction in inestment matters, realizing how sigificantly this knowledge and technique ear on the happiness and prosperity of ne average man.

"Nevertheless the present situation in egard to fraudulent security selling canot be met wholly by educational methods, ince these are after all so very slow. n spite of the educational work which as been done, the investing public hesiates to avail itself of the services and acilities for avoiding loss through fraud hich already exists, for all that it is so eady to criticize our government and ur financial institutions after swindling as occurred.

"The educational effort to protect the ublic against fraud must be continued ith all the persistence, ingenuity and ision that can possibly be mobilized for ne task. Yet in addition there must be erious effort also for the more practical esults obtainable through an efficient enorcement of the law."

Declaring that swindling takes its toll rom the whole citizenry by placing the urden of taxation upon the entire public, Ir. Simmons went into a consideration f specific ills which follow swindles peretrated among farmers, skilled workmen, anufacturers, and merchants. In all ases, he said, capital is misdirected and laces a great burden upon legitimate usiness.

"Perhaps the most obvious economic ffect of security frauds," Mr. Simmons ontinued, "is the powerful discouragement which they lend to saving and rift. We are, I think, all quite peruaded of the great potentialities for ood which small scale investment posesses. But if this desirable movement to continue, and to grow in force and cope, the continual threat of security windlers must be rapidly curtailed. A rther general undesirable effect which ollows from the sale of worthless ecurities is the interference which it ffords to the smooth and easy flow of apital into productive enterprise.

"Finally there is also a public aspect of windling which should be considered. raud strikes a foul blow at all credit hich is the most sensitive commodity in he world."

Briefly expressing his belief that the ure for the fraudulent securities problem onsists in a thoroughgoing education of ne investment public, Mr. Simmons conluded his address with a word of praise or the work that is being done by the Better Business Bureaus throughout the ountry.

"The Better Business Bureaus," he aid, "have succeeded most brilliantly in erforming just this work. They have nabled the prosecution arms of our federal and state governments to obtain a speedy and effective contact with concrete cases of swindling which they are attempting to prosecute and punish."

Mining promotions remain the steadfast favorites of swindlers according to an analysis by William H. Mulligan, manager, financial section, National Better Business Bureau. Mr. Mulligan examined into the origin, nature and ramifications of nearly 1,000 inquiries received by the financial section of the National Bureau in the last three months. One-fifth of all inquiries of current promotional offerings had to do with mining; one in eight concerned oil, one in ten involved real estate booms, one in twelve had to do with general security dealers mostly put and call, and installment plan specialists. Oil royalty schemes appeared once out of every fourteen, rosy manufacturing projects appeared in the same ratio, business service firms one in twenty-two, and automotive developments one in forty concluded the list.

A concrete example of what newspapers are doing to protect the public was offered by Frank E. Gannett, president of the Gannett Newspapers, in an address Thursday morning. He told of a suit won by the Rochester Times-Union in which an advertiser whose copy had been rejected as misleading sought to enjoin the paper from discontinuing the copy.

"As the result of the Times-Union's successful defense of this suit there has been established in the Supreme Court of the State of New York, the principle that a newspaper has the right to reject advertising which it believes to be untrue and deceptive, even though the advertiser submitting the copy has a linage contract with the newspaper," Mr. Gannett said.

"In the Times-Union of Nov. 10, 1926, an advertisement appeared stating that one could purchase furniture 40 per cent less from the Amalgamated Furniture Factories, Inc. In previous advertising, this firm had stated that furniture was built by its own factories for the furniture market. Investigation by the Rochester Better Business Bureau disclosed that the organization did not own any factories. It did not manufacture its own furniture, but purchased in the open market the same as other furniture stores.

"When the Times-Union was informed of this by the local Better Business Bureau it made an immediate investigation and thereupon refused to publish further advertising of the Amalgamated. Furniture Factories.

"The case was argued and on Feb. 1, Judge Stephens upheld the Times-Union in rejecting the advertising. He reviewed the fact that there was a contract between the Times-Union and the Amalgamated Furniture Factories, which called for 15,000 agate lines to be published in the Times-Union between May 1, 1926, and May 1, 1927. After publishing 4,045 agate lines, the newspaper refused to continue to publish the plaintiff's advertising, claiming that it was within its rights on two grounds: 1. The privilege of approval of the copy of the advertisements was expressly reserved to it in the contract, and, 2. The advertisements already published were untrue and deceptive and the copy for those it declined to publish was of kindred character, even if offensive in a lesser degree.

"'If the rate card were a part of the contract,' Judge Stephens held, 'the Times-Union cannot refuse to approve copy without a reasonable ground for doing so, and even if the rate card were not part of the contract, the Times-Union has the right 'to refuse to publish copy which contains a representation or statement of fact which is untrue, deceptive or misleading. Whether or not the rate card was made a part of the contract is not the only consideration. Irrespective of the rate card, the Times-Union was under no contract obligation to publish untrue statements in its advertising columns.'

"I should like particularly to call attention to this quotation from Judge Stephens' decision: 'It (the newspaper) not only has the right, but it was charged with the duty to refuse to give publicity to statements known to be untrue.' 'The newspaper,' said Judge Stephens, 'cannot be compelled to co-operate knowingly in the commission of a crime, however formally binding his contract obligation may appear to be; this is elemental in the law of contracts.'

"So far as we know this case is the only one of its kind that has ever been passed upon by the courts of this country. Its importance, not only to those interested in 'truth in advertising' from the point of view of Better Business Bureaus and advertising associations, but to newspapers as well, was immediately recognized, and news of the decision was carried all over the country by the press associations.

"We believe it established the unquestioned right of a newspaper to refuse advertising which it has reason to believe is misleading or untruthful, and from that point of view, it marks a milestone in the progress of the work that has been undertaken by such associations as the Better Business Bureaus."

Following Mr. Gannett, John A. Finneran, manager of the classified advertising department of the New York Times, spoke of the effective manner in which that newspaper deals with dealers who advertise as private individuals. He outlined the methods used by the Times in weeding out the "resident furniture dealers" and other dealers selling goods as private individuals. According to Mr. Finneran, dealer advertising runs into thousands and thousands of dollars a year. Pennsylvania, Mr. Finneran advised, is the only state that has a law to control this type of misleading advertising, although 23 states have variations of the Printers' Ink Model Statute, which is the advertising law of New York State.

The final meeting of the Commission was held in the Governors room of the Curb Market at which time the Commission Board of Governors were elected and resolutions were adopted. The new Board of Governors is made up of Robert M. Mount, of Portland, Ore., George Husser of Kansas City, Dale Brown of Cleveland, Kenneth Barnard of Detroit, David West of Buffalo and E. L. Greene of the National Bureau, New York. The Better Business Bureau Conference next year will be held at Chicago.

On Monday afternoon George Gordon Battle, lawyer, led an open forum discussion of the subject of libel for the benefit of local bureau managers, part of whose duties is preparing confidential bulletins describing new fraud activities in their communities.

Wednesday noon the delegates were guests of the Advertising Club of New York at luncheon, which was presided over by Sheldon R. Coons, advertising manager of Gimbel Brothers, department store, New York.

MORE THAN 300 SPORTING WRITERS COVERED TUNNEY-DEMPSEY FIGHT

Largest Newspaper Contingent in Sports History at Ringside—Two Platforms for Photographers at "Battle of the Three Millions"

THE elaborate preparations made for disseminating news of the Dempsey-Tunney championship fight in Chicago Thursday night overshadowed preparations for any other sporting event in history. More than 300 sports writers and special writers were present at Soldier Field Stadium to cover the event for newspapers and press associations, not only in the United States but in foreign countries as well. In the press section was a representative from Tokio, one from Honolulu, three from London, and others from Mexico, Australia, Cuba, Paris, Sweden and Germany.

Two balconies were constructed for photographers, one for newspapers and another for movie cameramen. Each local newspaper was allowed two photographers.

A special press room was fitted up at the Palmer house for the convenience of the newspaper people, who were furnished typewriters, Western Union and Postal Telegraph wires, messengers, and every other service necessary for them in their work. The press room was at their disposal free of charge.

Ike Dorgan was general chairman of publicity for the fight. Among the newspaper men and special writers who were at the ringside when the battle started were the following:

ABERDEEN (WASH.) DAILY WORLD OCCUPIES ITS NEW PUBLISHING PLANT

THE Aberdeen (Wash.) Daily World recently moved into its new building at Market and I streets, considered one of the model small city publishing plants of the Northwest.

The two-story building provides ample space for the newspaper's operations. On the ground floor is the main business office, which includes the bookkeeping, advertising and circulation departments; the job printing department; the press room, and the mailing and distribution room. The second floor houses the editorial, composing and sterotyping rooms.

Much new equipment, including a Duplex tubular press and a new Linotype was installed.

Werner A. Rupp is editor and publisher of the World, and Russell V. Mack is business manager.

The Aberdeen World was first purchased by Mr. Rupp in 1908 and was formerly the Aberdeen Daily Bulletin, which was founded as a daily in 1901.

SPORT NEWS PLAYED BIG BY EDITORS

Radio Broadcasting Has Stirred Up Wide Interest in Sporting Events, Wire News Agency Men Find—Record Fight Service

Newspapers of the world are "spor mad" these days. Never before in jour nalistic history, according to wire new agency executives, has there been suc a demand for sport news as there is today

"The editors have found that in peac times the small wars of the playing field sell papers faster than almost any othe kind of news" was one explanation o the current editorial fancy for givin big play to news of tennis, prize-fighting golf, baseball, racing and football.

An interesting fact brought to light thi week in connection with the Dempsey Tunney fight in Chicago was that the radio broadcasting of sporting events in stead of slackening editorial and reade interest in big exhibitions of this sort, ha very definitely acted as a stimulant.

W. J. McCambridge, in charge of traffic of the Associated Press, reported that the A. P. served a record number of members with special fight service this week.

Tom Gerber, promotion manager of the United Press, said that while radio was killing off the old-time "flash extra" editions of newspapers, more people today were "reading and demanding sport news in their papers than ever before."

"The public gets the flash news by radio and then wants to read the detailed blow-by-blow accounts of the fight from the experts in the newspapers," he said.

Marc A. Rose, executive editor of International News Service, has remarked on more than one occasion the world-wide interest in sport. Foreign clients of I. N. S., he said, are more exacting in their demands for coverage of sport news than for any other type of matter sent by cable. In regard to the special service on the Dempsey-Tunney fight, Mr. Rose said 90 clients had contracted for service.

PRESS SPENT $500,000 COVERING AVIATION

This Sum Expended in Five Months' Time, Survey Shows—New York Times and Its Associated Newspapers Account for $200,000, While Hearst's Expense Was $220,000

By PHILIP SCHUYLER

NEWSPAPERS have spent money liberally this summer chasing enterprising aviators in their attempts at conquest of the air.

A conservative estimate of the cost translated into mere dollars and cents places the figure near to $500,000 spent in the five months since Col. Charles A. Lindbergh spanned the Atlantic from New York to Paris, and including that epochal exploit which acted as a torch to start other airplane adventures blazing through the news columns.

In other words, the papers and wire agencies have spent $100,000 a month, more than $3,000 a day, or $125 an hour to tell the public all that was fascinating and new about flying.

This figure does not take into consideration an incalculable amount of energy thrown by newspapers into the reporting of the high adventures of aviation's most dramatic season; nor does it include all the salaries of expensive news men detailed to flight stories who otherwise would have been furnishing other matter to the press. And it does not count the sad sacrifice of one valuable newspaper man, Philip Alan Payne, managing editor of the New York Daily Mirror, and passenger on the ill-fated "Old Glory," who must now be counted among those daring pioneers who gave their lives to the advancement of the science of aviation.

As Victor H. Polachek, Hearst executive and one of the big spenders on aviation news, said to the writer this week:

"Aviation exploitation has now taken its place as the most expensive line of newspaper stunts in journalistic history."

The New York Times, and newspapers from coast to coast associated with it, held a virtual monopoly on the exclusive by-line stories of all the important trans-Atlantic and trans-Pacific fliers of the season. William Randolph Hearst outbid the Adolph S. Ochs paper only in obtaining the story of Art Goebel, winner of the Dole race. His papers also had the story of the Byrd flight from Bert Acosta.

Of the $500,000 spent by all newspapers, the Times group, it is thought, will account for nearly $200,000. The Hearst organization has spent approximately $220,000; while the remainder is taken up in increased cable costs paid this season by other newspapers who carried the flights as fully as possible, and by the four important news agencies of the country, the Associated Press, the International News Service, United Press, and Universal Service.

The Times group bought the news rights to Lindbergh's own story, and, according to a statement attributed to F. Lansing Ray, publisher of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, who first negotiated with the young pilot, in excess of $30,000 was paid out for the first series of Lindbergh stories. EDITOR & PUBLISHER was later informed that Col. Lindbergh collected nearly $100,000 for the news record of his achievement, including stories written on the U. S. S. Memphis on the return trip.

Swelling the total of the Times group were the sums, not officially divulged, paid for the stories written under the bylines of Chamberlin and Levine, Commander Richard E. Byrd; Lieutenants Maitland and Hegenberger, the army fliers who blazed the trail from California to Honolulu; Martin Jensen, who won second place in the Dole race; and now Brock and Schlee, world flyers. The latter pair in their Stinson-Detroiter sent cable bills skyrocketing when they reached the Far East, with tolls of 35 cents a word from Shanghai and 22 cents a word from Tokio.

The estimated $200,000 spent by the newspapers headed by the Times included only cash paid for news rights to stories and cable tolls in getting the story into New York for distribution to other members in the news association with the Times, for Mr. Ochs is definitely opposed to the idea of a newspaper becoming financial sponsor of such exploits.

"We have not promoted a single flight," Arthur Hays Sulzberger, vice-president of the Times Company pointed out to EDITOR & PUBLISHER. "Whenever groups have approached us asking for financial support of their adventures, we have turned them down. When expeditions have come to us fully financed, we have purchased the news rights, and the news rights only."

Mr. Sulzberger summarized the Times attitude toward the coverage of aviation news by saying tersely:

"The news was there and the Times went after it."

Business arrangements in connection with the fatal flight of the Hearst plane "Old Glory," which went down 600 miles from Newfoundland carrying Phil Payne, the Mirror's editor, Lloyd Bertaud and James D. Hill to their deaths, were not disclosed, but it was estimated that this venture will cost the Hearst treasury at least $100,000. It is known that the Fokker airplane itself was purchased by Mr. Payne for $50,000, and the expenses preparatory to the flight, the charter of the steamer Kyle which found the wreckage of the plane, and probable contract payments to the widows of the dead flyers will, it is believed, easily double this sum.

In the Mirror office a policy of silence is being strictly maintained.

George d'Utassy, president and treasurer, declined to discuss the disaster for publication. W. L. Randall, day managing editor, said:

"We believe it would be in bad taste for us to say anything now."

Exclusive of the disastrous Old Glory venture and press association cost, more than $120,000 of Hearst money was expended on aviation exploits during the five months since the Lindbergh flight.

Of this sum the ill-fated "Golden Eagle," the plane, which, purchased by George Hearst for the San Francisco Examiner, and piloted by Jack Frost, was among those lost in the recent Dole race from California to Hawaii, accounted for more than $60,000.

Bradford Merrill paid Bert Acosta $10,000 for the New York American alone for the exclusive right to his story of the flight in Commander Byrd's America from New York to Ver-sur-Mer. He had paid Commander Byrd himself $5,000 for a series of preliminary articles published before the flight started. The Acosta contract allowed the flyer 50 per cent of money made through syndication. This added another $10,000 to the bulging newspaper bill for aviation coverage.

The Junkers proposed flight from Germany to New York which only progressed as far as Ireland where it was forced back to Germany by storm, cost the Hearst organization $30,000. Handling this sum, Victor H. Polachek, general manager of the Hearst Sunday newspapers, paid $15,000 in cash for the privilege of putting a passenger, Hubert R. Knickerbocker, Berlin correspondent, Universal Service, on board. Added to this was $5,000 in cash for insurance, while cable tolls and other incidentals brought it up to the $30,000. If the flight had been successful, an additional $18,000 was to have been paid to the Junkers Company.

Hearst newspapers also paid Art Goebel $6,000 for his story of the flight from San Francisco to Honolulu.

When the Dole flight death toll was counted the Hearst organization first became bearish on backing similar aviation projects. The Junkers company wanted to continue preparations for a flight from Germany to this country. Mr. Polachek, however, immediately cabled the German officials to consider their contract performed, and at the same time he ordered Knickerbocker to give up all plans for making the flight.

Previously Mr. Hearst had been opposed to allowing any woman to risk her life in a trans-Atlantic flight. A woman on Mr. Hearst's European staff had made all preparations to fly from Germany to this country, when the "chief" heard about it. As soon as he learned what arrangements were being made, Mr. Hearst telegraphed his New York officials from California not to permit a woman to undertake the exploit under any circumstances.

As was apparent in telegrams passing between Mr. Hearst and Phil Payne, published in EDITOR & PUBLISHER two weeks ago. Mr. Hearst wanted to pay Acosta and Hill in full and call off the flight. They, however, decided it was in their right to complete the contract.

Mr. Hearst, it was declared on good authority in New York this week, had no intimation that the managing editor of the New York Daily Mirror intended to fly as a passenger on "Old Glory."

Mr. Polachek, general manager of the Hearst Sunday newspapers, who in the absence of Bradford Merrill, general manager of the Hearst newspapers, has shouldered a large share of the responsibility and financial detail in connection with the airplane flights under Hearst direction, declared that the various ventures had been the "most expensive line of newspaper stunts in history."

"Mr. Hearst will not spare himself any expense which will make for the scientific development of aviation," Mr. Polachek said. "We will continue to foster aviation achievement. However, we believe these stunt flights should not be continued. They are dependent wholly upon most favorable weather conditions and perfect motors, and with the least bad luck disaster follows. That is carrying pioneering to the point of foolhardiness. When there have been further developments and improvements in airplane construction and the multi-motored plane has been further perfected so that human life doesn't hang by a single thread, we

MARYLAND GAZETTE CELEBRATES 200th YEAR

Oldest American Newspaper Was Established Nearly 50 Years Before Revolutionary War—Suppressed for Opposition to Stamp Act in 1765 But Revived Later

By H. S. SHERWOOD

THE Annapolis (Md.) Maryland Gazette weekly on Monday of this week issued a large special edition marking its 200th year of publication.

Other American newspapers were started earlier than was this, but the Maryland Gazette claims to be the only paper being published today under the same name it started with in 1727, nearly half a century before the beginning of the Revolutionary War.

The paper supports its claim to be the senior of all American newspapers with the following letter from H. S. Parsons, acting head of the periodical division of the Library of Congress:

From the Periodical Division, July 16, 1927.

To the Librarian of Congress: At Annapolis, in 1727, William Parks published his first issue of the Maryland Gazette. This issue appeared either in August or September. Lee's History of American Journalism gives the date as Sept. 19. Fifty-five issues by Parks are still in existence, the earliest being No. 55, December 10, 1728 and the latest that of Nov. 29, 1734. The Library of Congress has a file of photostat reproductions of these.

The editor removed to Williamsburgh, Va., and there established the Virginia Gazette in 1736. The Maryland Gazette appeared again Jan. 17, 1745, edited by Jonas Green. In consequence of the Stamp Act, the paper was suspended for a time in 1765. The last issue before this suspension was headed "Maryland Gazette Expiring; In Uncertain Hopes of a Resurrection to Life Again." Three supplements to this issue appeared at intervals and on Dec. 10, 1765 came an issue entitled "An Apparition of the Late Maryland Gazette" which announced its revival within a few weeks. January 30, 1766 this promise was kept by "The Maryland Gazette Reviving."

After Green's death in 1767 his widow and later his sons carried on the publication. Another temporary suspension occured Dec. 25, 1777 to April 30, 1779, but the paper reappeared still in charge of members of the Green family, and so continued until after 1832.

The Maryland Gazette is the dean of present-day American newspapers. All that began to publish earlier have long since ceased.

H. S. PARSONS,
Acting Chief Periodical Division.

The house in which this "dean of present-day American newspapers" was published by Green is still standing in Annapolis which was, it will be remembered, something of a metropolis and center of fashion in the days preceding the Revolution and at one time the capital of the country or at least the Seat of Congress.

In its own account of its life, given in the special September 19 edition, the Maryland Gazette says:

"The first newspaper to be published in British America was the Boston News Letter, established in 1704. The second newspaper, the Boston Gazette, began in 1719. The American Weekly Mercury was established in Philadelphia in 1719 and New York printed its first newspaper in 1725. There was another paper started in Boston in 1727, the New England Weekly; and then, later in the same year, the Maryland Gazette, at Annapolis, printed its first issue numbering the sixth newspaper or periodical to be established in America.

"All have succumbed to the changes of the times or the will of tyrants. Others have been established and died, but down through the years the Maryland Gazette has marched with Father Time....

"The files and traditions of the Maryland Gazette indicate that the first issue was printed in August, 1727, although the oldest known copy now existent, dated Dec. 10, 1728, numbered 65, would, counting weekly back therefrom, make the date of the first issue September 19, 1727. The masthead and the date on this old copy are intact, the lower right hand corner of the first sheet has been torn away.

"At the Library of the Maryland Historical Society in Baltimore an almost complete file of these ancient copies of the

A PRINCE OF WALES is Born.
GOD Save the KING.

St. James's, August 12, 1762.

THIS MORNING, at half an Hour after VII, the Queen was happily Delivered of a PRINCE. Her Royal Highness the Princess Dowager of Wales, several Lords of his Majesty's most honourable Privy Council, and the Ladies of her Majesty's Bedchamber, being Present.

This great and important News was immediately made known to the Town by the firing of the Tower Guns; and the Privy Council being assembled as soon as possible thereupon, it was ordered, that a Form of Thanksgiving, for the Queen's safe Delivery, should be prepared by his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury, to be used in the Bills of Mortality on Sunday next, and throughout the King's Dominions soon after the respective Ministers shall receive the same.

Her Majesty is, GOD be praised, as well as can be expected in her present Condition; and the Prince enjoys perfect Health.

August 14. Yesterday Messengers were dispatched to the different Courts, to notify Her Majesty's happy Delivery of a Prince.

The Person that waited on the King with the News of her Majesty's being delivered of a Prince, received a Present of a 500 l.

It is said there was a numerous and splendid Court at St. James's to compliment the Queen on the safe Delivery of the Queen, Both of a Prince

PETERSBURGH, July 10.

THE Senate assembled Yesterday, and after solemn Deliberation, it was determined that Peter the Third should be declared a Traitor to his Country, Deprived of his Imperial Dignity, Count Pannin, Governor of the Great Duke Paul Petrowitz, Privy Counsellor, and Field Marshal Butterlin, ordered to execute the Resolution of the Senate: In Consequence of which Count Romanowsky went to the Castle of Oranienbaum, and there found upon the First Alarm, made some Resistance at the Head of his Regiment, but on his receiving a violent Wound on the Head with a Sabre, he was taken Prisoner.

July 12. The principal Circumstances that attended the late extraordinary Revolution are as follow:

The Emperor had been for several Days at his Country Seat at Oranienbaum, and the Empress at another, called Petersdorf. On the 9th Instant, at 8 in the Morning, the Empress arrived in this City, and immediately repaired to the Senate; where, after embracing the Guards, the assembled Senators congratulating and very accordingly Proclaimed her Emperess of all the Russias, at the same Time declaring the Emperor, Peter the Third, to be deposed.

After this Proclamation was made, during which Time the Gates of the City were kept Shut, the new Sovereign went to the Church of Kasensky, where, after Divine Service, all the Grandees of the Empire took the Oath of Fidelity to her, to whom she declared, that she had taken the Reins of Government purely for the good of the Country. At the Beginning of these Ceremonies, in order to prevent Disturbances, her Imperial Majesty thought proper to secure the Person of Prince George of Holstein.

Other necessary Precautions being taken, the Empress, dressed in the Uniform of the Guards, and wearing a blue Ribbon, mounted her Horse, and put herself at the Head of 9 or 10,000 Men, and marched to Oranienbaum, but the Emperor was not there. That Prince was gone to Peterhoff, with an Intent to dine there; but when he arrived, he was greatly surprised to find that the Empress was not there, and hearing that she let out early in the Morn ng for Peterhoff, dispatched several Couriers, one after another, to know the Reason of her so sudden Departure.

At length some Generals, who had taken Measures, found Means to get to Peterhoff, and informed the Emperor of what had happened. He got into a Yatcht, and would have made his Escape to Cronstadt, but found the Garrison against him, and was obliged to return to Oranienbaum, where, in order to secure himself, he got together as many Peasants as he could, and entrenched himself.

Thus was this memorable Revolution brought about, supported by many of the Grandees of the Empire. Several of the Favourites of the late Emperor have proved the unhappy Victims of it; but Prudence will not permit mentioning their Names.

Hamburgh, August 6. The Russian Lieutenant-General Woeykow hath published an Ordonnance at Konigsberg, dated the 16th of July, intimating, 'That though, by 'Virtue of the Peace concluded with the King of Prussia, he 'had published, on the 3d of the said Month, that the Inhabitants of Prussia were discharged from their Oath of Fidelity to Russia, and were to return to their Allegiance 'to his Prussian Majesty; he, nevertheless by these Presents 'gave them Notice, by Command of the Empress Catherine 'II. that what he then published was now annulled, and 'ceased to have any Effect; in that the Inhabitants were to 'remain under the Dominion of Russia, &c.

Berlin, August 5. To efface the Impression made by Defeats in the Mountains of Bohemia, were about 3000 Men, in Killed, Deserters and Prisoners. The latter amount to upwards of 2000, and amongst them are 15 Officers. We have also taken 14 Pieces of Cannon. Our Loss, when it is considered that the Enemy had the Advantage of Ground, and our Troops had the most difficult Passes to get through, may be reckoned inconsiderable; it does not amount to 600 Men, including the Killed, Wounded, and Missing.

Petersburgh, July 7. O. S. That Day a Declaration was published here by the Empress, giving an Account of the Decease of the late Emperor Peter the Third.

LONDON.

Wednesday a Cartel Ship arrived at Portsmouth, with the Garrison of St. John's in Newfoundland on board.

Letters from Bourdeaux, by Yesterday's Flanders Mail, advise, that several Ships which were in the Harbour are taken up for Transports, to carry a Number of Troops for Newfoundland, a great Part of which were already embarked. This are to be conveyed by three Men of War.

By a Letter from a Gentleman at Oporto, which came by Yesterday's Lisbon Mail, we are informed that every Thing was very quiet there; and since the Arrival of our Fleet at that Place, all Fears of the Spaniards were entirely removed.

August 10. Letters from France by the Flanders Mail, mention that the Transports, with French Troops for Newfoundland, to intercept the French Ships trading Home from thence.

The Maryland Packet, from Virginia, is arrived in the River. She was a melting Ship.

Extract of a Letter from Gottenburgh, June 19.

"The Emperor of Morocco being attended with the English, the Fire and Garrison suffer very much, having no Sort of Provisions from Spain or Barbary, against the Emperor's Son, as it is hoped, through his Application, Things may be brought about again."

By Letters from Paris, dated the 5th Instant, we have Advice, that three Transports, with Troops, got out from Rochefort the 3d Instant at Night, and as they have heard nothing of them since, it is thought they have proceeded on their Voyage. There were four more watching for the same Opportunity.

In the Manifesto of the Empress of Russia, dated the 9th of July, N. S. published in the Petersburgh Gazette of the 13th, we find the Reasons established in the Room of the Worst, its greatest Beauty which commenced the second Instance on the 6th Appearance of the Monarch.

Yesterday Colonel Lepell arrived at Whitehall from Germany, with the Standards taken from the French the 3rd of July, in the Battle of Lutterberg.

The Kings of Prussia, in writing to one another, always style themselves Brothers, and this unbounded Love of his Character is, in a manner, the Cause of the Resentment of Russia's Discovery.

Facsimile of Oct. 21, 1762 issue of Maryland Gazette

Maryland Gazette has been preserved. The Maryland Gazette was then but four small pages. There was usually published in each issue a story, poetry or a learned discourse on some leading topic of the day; together with advertisements and news from other colonies and from all over the world. When William Parks founded his Maryland Gazette, he also arranged for his own news service, with special correspondents in London, Madrid, Prague, Paris, Vienna, Moscow, Hamburg, Stockholm, Hague and other capitals of Europe.

"The letters from these correspondents were received with great irregularity. Many dispatches bear the date of six months or more before the date of publication. Nevertheless it was 'news,' to be had no earlier and in no other way and made the Maryland Gazette one of the leading newspapers in the colonies. . . . "

Examples of the advertisements carried in the Gazette, advertisements which represented the beginnings of the American advertising, are the following:

"Any person having a plantation to dispose of within a few miles of Annapolis, well situated with wood may apply to the printer of this paper who will give information where they may find a purchaser for the said plantation."

"Notice is hereby given that there is a ship arrived in the South river with about 200 choice slaves, which will be exposed to sale on Thursday, the 22nd of this instant."

Local news was handled in the following manner in the year 1728:

"The week before last a negro man represented by the following in the year 1728:

"Vienna, August 25,

"Letters from Sagomin in Hungard of the 16th of July impart that several persons of both sexes, convicted of witchcraft, have been condemned to be burnt alive, but before they were executed they put them upon the following trials...., The first was to tie their hands and feet and throw them into the water, who, like the sorceress us'd to do, swam like a piece of wood; after which they were put into scales, when it appeared that a large woman weighed but an ounce, and her husband five grams and the other still lighter; whereupon they were burned alive the 23rd past. There were among them a midwife who had baptized 2,000 children in the name of the devil."

Parks, the founder, went to England around 1730 and gathered ideas about printing. About this time, one of the newspaper entrepreneurs of his time apparently, he went to Williamsburgh, Va., and established a newspaper there.

One of the first dramatic criticisms to be published in America appeared in the columns of the Maryland Gazette in 1745 when a company of players appeared in Annapolis, and in an issue published while the players were in town an outburst of verse in admiration of the leading lady. One stanza reads:

"Ye gods!. 'Tis Cytherea's face;
"'Tis Diana's faultless form;
"But hers alone the nameless grace
"That every heart can charm."

The Stamp Act and the manner in which it was received in Maryland are reflected in the columns of the Maryland Gazette, in the issue of Sept. 5, 1765 and in many issues in the years between that and the Revolution.

Benjamin Welsh, a Marylander, on that date, makes the following statement:

"I am informed that the Stamp Act takes place on the first day of November next. I therefore hereby give notice to all officers whatever that may be appointed by virtue of that most grievous and most unconstitutional act (to prevent them trouble) that I will pay no tax whatever but what is laid upon me by my representatives."

On Oct. 10 the Maryland Gazette appeared with a skull and cross bones in the spot in the paper where the stamp should have been affixed. It said editorially.

"We are sorry, heartily sorry, to acquaint the public in general and our customers in particular, that this gazette will not any longer be published (for some time) for reasons already given, which cannot but be known. It is true that it might have lived three or more weeks before that Doomsday, the dreadful first of November, but as this week's paper completes the year with all our old customers, as well as finishes the seven years partnership in it between the printers and that dismal day being near at hand it ceases now.

"A paper by way of postscript, supplement or appendix to this gazette is designed to be printed each week (without any charge to the customers in order to publish some advertisements, etc., etc.) until the above time."

On Dec. 10, there appeared an issue entitled "an apparition of the Maryland Gazette." On Jan. 30, 1766 appeared "The Maryland Gazette Reviving," published by Jonas Green. This was followed in February of the same year with "The Maryland Gazette Revived."

Jonas Green died and his wife Anne Catherine Green became the editor and publisher. She was the first woman editor in Maryland and one of the first in the country. The widow of Andrew Bradford conducted the American Weekly Mercury in Philadelphia following her husband's death in 1742.

The heat of political discussion leading up to the Declaration of Independence is shown in the records of historical events in the columns of the Gazette. That document is printed in full in the issue of July 11, 1776.

The paper suspended in December 1777 and there was no issue until April 30, following, when the paper reappeared published by Frederick Green and Samuel Green.

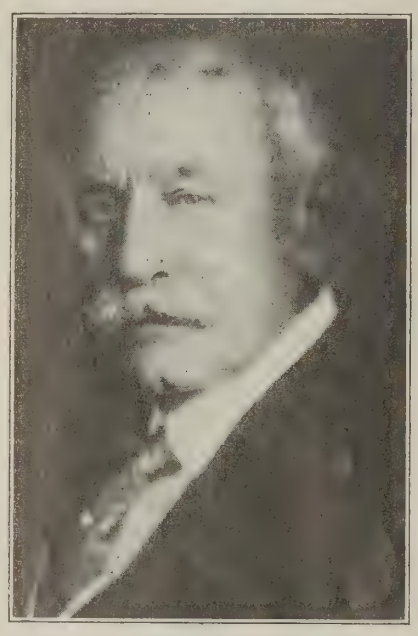
Members of the Green family continued to publish the paper until 1839.

In September, 1854, it was issued again by R. D. Sellman and Thomas J. Wilson, called the "Annapolis Gazette." Sellman sold out to Wilson and the latter continued to publish it until 1868, when it was taken over by Guest King.

The old name "The Maryland Gazette" was restored Jan. 5, 1887, Philip E. Porter acquired it and published it until 1910, when it was bought by William H. Abbott and W. Meade Holliday. It became a part of the Evening Capital of Annapolis, with which paper it was merged, its identity being lost until Aug. 3, 1922, when publication of the weekly Maryland Gazette was resumed. In January, 1921 Ridgely P. Melvin bought the Evening Capital and the Maryland Gazette. He Revived the Gazette.

In November, 1926, Mr. Melvin's interest was bought by the Capital-Gazette Press, Inc., Talbott T. Speer, president, H. G. Carroll, vice-president.

The Maryland Gazette is a weekly the chief circulation of which is in Annapolis and in the agricultural country around Annapolis. Charles M. Christian is editor and Thomas L. Christian, associate editor.



MANAGING EDITOR OF WASHINGTON STAR DEAD AFTER 52 YEARS ON STAFF

Rudolph Kauffmann Was Oldest Living Employe—Father One of Original Owners—Interviewed Lincoln in Youth

RUDOLPH KAUFFMANN, vice-president and managing editor of the Washington Star, died suddenly at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Lewis N. Murray, on West Lake road, near Dunkirk, N. Y., Monday. Death was caused by heart trouble.

Mr. Kauffmann was 74 years old. He was taken ill suddenly in February.

Born in Zanesville, Ohio, Oct. 5, 1853, Mr. Kauffmann was the son of the late

Rudolph Kauffmann

Samuel Hay Kauffmann, president of the Evening Star Newspaper Company, until his death in 1906, and one of the original members of the company which purchased the Star in 1867 and still owns and controls it. The son spent his early years in Ohio, moving with his parents during the Civil War to the National Capital, where his father had been tendered a governmental position.

Here he attended the Emerson Institute, preparing at that school for Amherst College, whence he graduated in 1875 with the degree of bachelor of arts. Early in his career he had a personal interview with President Lincoln.

In the autumn of 1875 Mr. Kauffmann entered the service of the Star as a reporter and was consequently at the time of his death its oldest living employe.

On January 5, 1882, Mr. Kauffmann married Miss Jessie Kennedy of Washington. Mrs. Kauffmann died in 1926. In 1901 Mr. Kauffmann built Airlie, on the Military road, adjacent to Rock Creek Park, as a summer home, and a few years later made it his permanent residence.

Mr. Kauffmann rose through the various grades in the news department and was appointed managing editor in 1893. Later he was elected vice-president of the Evening Star Newspaper Co. He also was president of the Columbia Planograph Co. and a director of the National Metropolitan Bank. He was a member of the board of managers of the National Geographic Society, a director of the Corcoran Gallery of Art and of the Children's Hospital. He had many club affiliations, membership in the Cosmos Club He was the first strictly local newspaper man ever taken into the Gridiron Club.

During his early days as a newspaper reporter Mr. Kauffmann covered a number of interesting and unusual assignments. He was one of the first newspaper reporters to utilize the "wheel" in the pursuit of news.

Mr. Kauffmann was a lifelong member of the Presbyterian Church of the Covenant, established in 1886.

Among the survivors are his son, Rudolph Max Kauffmann and his brother, Victor Kauffmann, who are members of the staff of the Star.

KAUFFMANN ALWAYS A FRIEND TO HIS STAFF

By Edward J. Bruen

TO have worked on the staff of the Washington Star under the leadership of Rudolph Kauffmann, its managing editor, was a great privilege. He had none of the traits that make executives unpopular. On the contrary—the longer a man remained in the organization the more did he admire this kindly and friendly chief whose greatest faculty seemed to be in the art of doing good.

Having been disassociated from the Star organization for many years this writer's perspective of Mr. Kauffmann's career as the executive editor of a great newspaper is not alloyed with any of the inaccuracies that might come from intimate association immediately previous to his death.

No doubt many of the qualities that made this rugged and sterling character popular with those with whom he was associated came to him as a heritage from his distinguished father, Samuel Hay Kauffmann, who was president of the Evening Star Newspaper Company until his death in 1906, and who was one of the foremost authorities on the Art Preservative in his day. He was always a friend to the employes of his newspaper and his son developed this spirit of friendship and kindness almost into a personal religion during the 34 years he filled the position of managing editor.

It wasn't necessary for a member of the staff who was in trouble to seek out Mr. Kauffmann. Through some means the latter found things out and the individual's bad time was soon a thing of the past if sound advice, great influence or good coin could bring it about. The deceased editor had the utmost contempt for money except insofar as it could be applied to the advancement of his city, his newspaper or its employes. He never hesitated to open his purse in time of need.

The entire newsroom and Sunday staffs of the Star came to realize how much Mr. Kauffmann had their interests at heart when after our entrance into the World War living conditions in Washington became exorbitant. Each married man was invited to a personal conference with the managing editor, and plans were devised whereby the latter advanced necessary additional moneys out of his private purse until salary adjustments were made in the regular course of affairs.

Another way in which Mr. Kauffmann exhibited his genuine spirit of friendliness was to invite members of his staff to his beautiful home, Airslee, for a week-end. Families in which there were children were particularly fortunate in this regard because all children were beautiful to him. He loved to share the beauty of his home with them. Incidentally one of his most valuable services to the city of Washington was as a director of the Children's Hospital, while one of his greatest services to the realm of art was in his work as a trustee of the Corcoran Gallery of Art, a position in which he succeeded his father who was a member of the original body.

In the composing room of the Star Rudolph Kauffmann will always be remembered as a great "boss printer." Every day, during his third of a century as managing editor, he doffed the raiment of the editorial sanctum after luncheon and attired in overalls and apron, presided over the makeup of the newspaper. He joked with the mechanics, invented nicknames for some of them and loved them all. A big man physically he always had an ardent zest for life. The outdoors appealed to him in a special way and he has devoted more time to hunting and fishing during the past ten years as he has by degrees turned over his responsibilities to his only son, Rudolph Max Kauffmann, whom he trained as his successor.

ADD TO SPORT SERVICE

Maritime Canadian Newspapers to Get Additional Sunday Hour

The developing and featuring of Canadian news in Canadian newspapers was strongly urged by several delegates at the semi-annual meeting of the Maritime Provinces members of the Canadian Press, held at the Brunswick Hotel, Moncton, N. B., Sept. 13.

A morning and afternoon session discussed various methods of more efficient distribution of news throughout the Maritime Provinces. Curtailments were made in the handling of routine copy and a decision reached to open the Maritime loop an hour earlier on Sunday to handle extra sport copy.

The delegates were guests of the local Rotary Club at luncheon.

The following members attended:

John Scott, vice-president, C. P., and managing editor, Montreal (Que.) Gazette; J. F. B. Livesay, general manager, Canadian Press; H. P. Robinson, director, St. John (N. B.) Telegraph-Journal and C. P.; W. H. Dennis, general manager, Halifax (N. S.) Herald and director, C. P.; A. D. SERVING WOMEN READERS

That Is Morning Paper's Job, Says Mrs. Reid of N. Y. Herald Tribune

A morning newspaper should serve women readers as conscientiously as it does men, Mrs. Ogden Reid, advertising director of the New York Herald Tribune, declared this week, announcing a series of cooking schools the Herald Tribune is to conduct next month.

Plans for the school, were announced at a luncheon Mrs. Reid gave to prominent club women at the Commodore Hotel. Miss Florence Brobeck, director of the Herald Tribune Institute, described the history and ideals of that department and Mrs. William Brown Meloney, editor of the Herald Tribune Magazine, declared that never had women been "so intelligently and passionately" interested in home making as they were today.

Jessie M. De Both will direct the cooking schools.

COOLIDGE HOST TO BRISBANE

Arthur Brisbane, editor of the New York Evening Journal, was a luncheon guest of President Coolidge in Washington, Sept. 16. Following the luncheon he declared he felt Mr. Coolidge's statement that he did not choose to run in 1928 clearly eliminated him as a candidate.

TWO CAPE TOWN STAFF MEN VISIT NEW YORK

L. G. Green, Editorial Executive, and A. Hayes, Cartoonist, Impressed by Size of U. S. Dailies—Praise Advertising Art

Two South African newspaper men, Lawrence G. Green, editorial executive, and Alf. Hayes, cartoonist, are in New York on vacation, studying American newspapers. Both are members of the staff of the Cape Town Argus, one of a group of daily newspapers published by Argus South African Newspapers, Limited.

The other dailies are: Johannesburg Star, Natal Advertiser, Kimberley Diamond Fields Advertiser, Bloemfontein Friend, Bulawayl Chronicle, Salisbury Herald.

Newspaper work below the Equator is much the same as it is in England or in this country, they stated. The Argus and its associated dailies maintain editorial and advertising offices in London and receive a daily report from Reuters Agency. Formerly many of the men employed on South African newspapers were from England, but now they are chiefly staffed with men born and reared in the South African states.

Both Mr. Green and Mr. Hayes were impressed with the great size of New York newspapers and the large advertising bulk. They visited the plant of the New York Times and watched the preparation of Wednesday's 60-page regular edition. Both men thought news stories in the United States are written with more vividness and style than in British newspapers.

Mr. Hayes, whose cartoons are a regular feature of the Cape Town Argus, was particularly impressed with the high standard of art maintained in American advertising.

American made motor cars dominate the field in South Africa, the visitors stated and selling is stimulated with considerable advertising. American movies also are first in the film field.

Mr. Green joined the Argus Newspapers in 1920 and Mr. Hayes in 1922, after serving with the Dorland Agency in its London office. Mr. Green is sailing for Africa Sept. 29 and will arrive home 29 days later. Mr. Hayes will sail for England Oct. 8, and will remain there until the first of the year.

NEW COAST DAILY PLANNED

Incorporation Papers Filed for Salem (Ore.) World—May Start Oct. 1

Incorporation papers have been filed in Salem, Ore., for a new afternoon daily to be published in that city. It will be known as the Salem World and will first issue Sept. 20 if a plant, which has been bought in Spokane can be assembled in Salem by that time.

The incorporators are M. C. Brooks, C. C. Baker and A. M. Church, all of Salem, and the officers are: President, Frank D. Bligh; vice-president, C. E. Albin; treasurer, Isadore Greenbaum; secretary, C. C. Baker.

The newspaper is the outgrowth of labor difficulties which resulted in the two present Salem dailies declaring open shop and employing non-union printers. It is announced that the World will have full leased wire news service and that Byron E. Shelleberger, until recently mechanical superintendent of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, will be managing editor.

SENDS MEN TO N. Y. SHOW

George M. Rogers, general manager of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, sent six of his men to study the New York Graphic Arts Exhibition. They were: H. J. Graham, foreman maintenance; Fred Uhl, foreman engraving; M. Moeder, foreman composing; Thomas Gebbie, foreman pressroom; Mac. D. Sinclair, head linotype machinist; George W. Kennel, foreman stereotype.

EVERY YEAR NOW HAS 135 WEEKS THANKS TO ADVERTISING MEN

Like Eliza Crossing the Ice American Public Leaps from Bread and Milk Week to Prune Week, Across Linoleum Week and Into Prayer Week

APRIL has nine weeks; May has five; October, seven; and November, nine.

A new calendar has not been devised. The advertisers are simply making holiday, setting aside "weeks" to "capture the interest of the public," and in so doing they have stretched the ordinary year of 52 weeks into 135.

Guy E. Marion, manager of the research department of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, has compiled a list containing the names, and in some cases, the dates of all the special weeks and days that now grace the American calendar, thanks to advertising. In preparing the lists he was assisted among others by John Cotton Dana, of the New Jersey Public Library; the Chamber of Commerce of the United States; the Bureau of Business Standards of the Shaw Publications; the Chicago Daily News and the New York Times.

The present month, according to the compilation, is rather arid as far as weeks go. It only boasts the traditional four, one of which has been given the name of "Constitution Week" and has already been celebrated.

October does very well. Next month various sections of the country have set aside the following weeks for observance:

"Apple Week"; "Better Speech Week"; "Fire Prevention Week"; "Girl Scout Week"; "Management Week"; "National Fire Prevention Week"; "National Picture Week" and "Pharmacy Week."

"Better Speech Week" is duplicated in November, which, all in all, is a most serious-minded month, what with "American Education Week," "Book Week," "Children's Book Week," "Father and Son Week" and, fortunately, "Prayer Week." The only materialistic chord struck in this month of Thanksgiving time, with its turkey, pumpkin pie and other fixings, is that of "Canned Foods Week," officially listed for November.

The versatility and ingenuity of the advertising men of America is ably demonstrated in an alphabetical listing of the weeks, running from "Achievement Week" and "Art Week," two examples in the "A's," through to "Walk and Be Healthy Week," "World Court Week" and "Y. M. C. A. Week."

A few of the choice weeks include: "Blossom Week"; "Bread and Milk Week"; "Corn Week"; "Courtesy Week"; "Go to School by Parents Week"; "Grandma Week"; "Honesty Week"; "Hearing Week"; "Linoleum Week"; "Poetry Week"; "Prune Week"; and "Truth Week."

The complete chronological listing of "weeks" follows:

JANUARY: National Thrift Week.

FEBRUARY: Boy Scouts' Week; National Drama Week; Truth Week.

MARCH: None.

APRIL: American Forest Week; Be Kind to Animals Week; Better American Speech Week; Better Homes Week; National Boys' Week; Health Promotion Week; Reindeer Week; National Negro Health Week; National Garden Week.

WYTHE WILLIAMS HEAD OF GENEVA CORPS

First American To Be Named President of Correspondents Accredited To League—Gridiron Ends Year's Activities

By ALBIN E. JOHNSON

(Geneva Correspondent, EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

For the first time since its organization, an American has been elected as president of the International Association of Journalists Accredited to the League of Nations at Geneva. Wythe Williams, correspondent of the New York Times, was chosen by acclamation.

The honor last year was offered to Edwin L. James, of Paris, European director of the Times, but declined. Mr. James held that so long as the United States was not a member of the League, an American should not head the Association. During the past year, however, Henry Wales, European correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, has been vice-president, and Robert Neville, of the New York Times, a director. At the present there are more than a score of American newspaper men members and the organization was originally founded by Americans co-operating with their European colleagues.

Other officers elected are:

Vice-presidents: M. Barde, L'Oeuvre, Paris; Dr. A. Keller, Der Bund, Berne; M. Sigetoku, Asahi, Tokio; M. Valich, Novosti, Zagreb, Jugoslavia; and Chalinor James, Daily Mail, London.

Secretary-General, André Glarner, Exchange Telegraph, London; treasurer, M. de Jongh van Beck und Donk, Rotterdamischer Neuwe Courant, Rotterdam; permanent delegate, M Francois Laya, Le Temps, of Geneva; assessors' committee, George Bernhard, editor Vossiche Zeitung, Berlin, who is retiring president; Carlo a'Prato, of Geneva and Honorio Roigt, La Nacion, Buenos Ayres.

The journalists concluded their official organization activities with their annual "Gridiron Lunch" to the members of the League Council and president of the Assembly. As a special mark of courtesy they set aside all rules and invited thirty visiting American editors to be present.

TENNIS REPORTERS ORGANIZE

Writers Form Association with Allen, New York Sun, President

The Lawn Tennis Writers Association, with J. P. Allen of the New York Sun as president, was formed at a meeting held this week at the Harvard Club of New York. A constitution patterned after that of the English Lawn Tennis Journalists' Association was adopted. Mr. Allen has been writing for New York newspapers for the last 30 years. In recent years he has concentrated on tennis and billiards.

George Carens of the Boston Transcript was elected vice-president, and A. D. Rothman of the Australian Press Association, secretary-treasurer. On the executive committee with them were elected Fred Hawthorne, of the New York Herald Tribune; Miss Gertrude Lynahan, New York World; John Tunis, New York Evening Post, and Robert Sensenderfer, Philadelphia Bulletin. The first annual meeting of the association will be held in December.

DAILY STAGES FLOWER SHOW

The Milwaukee Journal staged its third annual flower show in the Journal building recently. There were 740 entries and more than 4,000 persons visited the exhibit. Prizes totaling $300 were awarded.

"SCIENTIFIC PRECISION" IN ADVERTISING GOAL OF I. A. A. RESEARCH GROUP

Walter Strong's Committee Will Analyze 1,000 Campaigns Seeking Fundamentals of Successful Advertising Procedure—Blazing New Trail

JUST one year ago, at the annual convention in Philadelphia of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, Eugene McGuckin, president of the Eugene McGuckin Company, Philadelphia, made an address in which he emphasized the need for "scientific precision in advertising" adding that "it is not unlikely that in another few years the advertising agency will be in possession of definite formulae based upon known factors—comparable to the formulae of the engineer and the chemist."

WALTER A STRONG

Rowe Stewart, president of the Philadelphia Record and secretary of the International Advertising Association, which formerly was the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, announced this week that the Association has just approved the appointment of a special committee to further a scientific study of the economic value of advertising and that its executive committee has pledged a sum approximating $75,000 to carry out the committee's work, the basis of which, he explained, will be "the compilation of accurate facts and figures on the value of advertising which will make further experimentation unnecessary in many phases of advertising and selling."

"It is safe to say that the advertising agency of the future will be able to put its finger on the weak spots in the manufacturers' distribution system and point out the remedy almost as certainly as a chemist can analyze a solution and state what elements are missing," Mr. McGuckin explained in his address.

And that's exactly what the newly-named special committee of the I. A. A. has set out to enable the advertising agency and the advertiser to do, Mr. Stewart pointed out in an exclusive interview with a representative of EDITOR & PUBLISHER.

"The appointment of this new committee looks to me to be one of the most advanced steps ever taken by the I. A. A. to emphasize the importance of advertising as an economic factor in the nation's business," said Mr. Stewart.

"Officially, the committee was christened, at the start, as the Committee on Economics of Advertising. But the word 'economics' covers such a wide range and is susceptible of so many meanings, that it seems to me a better designation of it would be the Committee on the Value of Advertising. That is more easily understood and it explains clearly just what the committee has in mind—a study of the value of advertising. Whether it will be finally given that designation will be for the committee itself to decide.

"However, that's of small importance. The primary function of the new committee is to study the scientific value of advertising, newspaper, magazine and, in fact, every kind of advertising. Walter Strong, publisher of the Chicago's Daily News, is chairman of the new committee, of which I am a member. It is to the credit of the executive committee of the I. A. A. that when a budget approximating $75,000 was presented to it as the approximate cost of the suggested survey, there were immediate voluntary offers covering the sum from more than 100 advertising representatives at the session.

"The committee recommended, and it was agreed, that the study be directed by Professor Barnes, of Northwestern University. There is no argument as to the need for such a study. It is a bit of constructive work that will be of real, practical help to every advertiser, every prospective advertiser; every magazine and newspaper and their representatives; every advertising agency and their salesmen and merchandisers. Nothing like it ever has been attempted before. Its value will be immediately apparent.

"Suppose, for example, an advertising agency representative or a publishers' representative is interested in selling a prospective new advertiser on advertising. He has gone through all the regular channels in his efforts to prove to the prospect that advertising pays. He recites instances of national advertising campaigns that have been successful and he proceeds to recount specific instances. The information concerning these campaigns he has gathered a bit here, some more there and still more from the advertising department of the manufacturer he has held up as Exhibit A.

"'That's all very well,' says the prospect, perhaps, 'but where's the evidence? What have you got to show in actual facts and figures as to how this particular campaign was carried through? Just how did these advertisers achieve this prestige? How did they merchandise their products? And how do I know that advertising will do for me that you say it has done for them?'

"Well, where is the evidence? Where are the 'cold facts'? And right there the interviewer fumbles. Not that he isn't telling the whole truth and nothing but! He is. But, where is the 'corroborative evidence'? as the lawyer would say.

"The 'corroborative evidence' just isn't. But it will be when the committee gets into its studies of advertising values, because the getting of this evidence and its analysis is to be one of its primary functions. And these records are to be for the information of that part of the interested public concerned with the buying, selling, writing or placing of advertising.

"To prove his point in court an attorney refers to 'precedents.' He cites earlier decisions by courts and judges. He backs up what he says by cold facts and figures that are a matter of accepted record. He produces the records—actually shows them in the courtroom.

"The physician does the very same thing. He knows, because he has the records to prove it, that such-and-such surgeon, five, six or ten years ago, found certain conditions existing when certain symptoms were apparent and that by proceeding along a certain line he obtained certain specific results that the records show were entirely successful, and what worked out in the earlier instances will work out just the same now, by the same methods. The chemist or the engineer works along similar lines.

"In a word, the big problem the advertising profession is up against right now is the need for actual bona fide scientific evidence of the value of advertising, evidence that will be official and trustworthy.

"The committee will make an exhaustive study of, say, 1,000 national advertising campaigns by recognized advertisers in varied lines of manufacturing and business. It will take up each of these campaigns, gather all the facts concerning them, how they were put over, what were the merchandising conditions, how distribution was effected, how production was increased through advertising and how this increased production, influenced lower consumer prices and larger profits. In a word, every feature of each campaign will be studied by experts and every phase of it will be carefully analyzed and recorded.

"Yes, the exceptions, as the committee finds them, will be tabulated in just the same way. The campaign into which a lot of advertising money was put and which subsequently failed, for some definite reason, also will be analyzed and explained. Why it failed—whether through improper distribution, indifferent advertising, lack of sales support or merchandising activity or whatever the cause—this also will be told in detail so that the new advertiser or the present advertiser working, perhaps, along similar lines, may be saved from a similar experience through an uncolored presentation of the facts as they really exist.

"All of this information, carefully tabulated and scientifically analyzed, will be for the information of anyone concerned. The committee's findings will be given wide publicity in interested channels. Schools will get it, and colleges where advertising procedure is being taught. Advertising agencies, newspapers and magazines, advertisers and prospective advertisers—all will have opportunity to study the committee's findings in the interest of a larger appreciation of advertising and its value, based on records of these values, scientifically obtained. In a word, as Mr. McGuckin says, 'scientific precision in advertising'."

Mr. Stewart said that the committee's headquarters will likely be established in Chicago and that it will begin work at once.

Machine on Exhibit at New York Fair Can Be Attached for Picture Service to Any Receiving Set, Is Claim

The Cooley photo-radio machine, which receives pictures by radio and which is said to be applicable to any broadcast receiver, was demonstrated in New York this week at the opening of the Radio World's Fair at Madison Square Garden. A picture of Gov. Smith was picked up by the machine on exhibit on the opening night.

The picture unit plugs into the receiving set in place of the loud speaker. The picture is recorded on a revolving cylinder which is synchronized with a transmitting cylinder, around which is wrapped the original picture. Illustrations measuring four by five inches can be received in five minutes. The printing method used at the receiving end is based upon a corona discharge which affects sensitized paper. The machine can be made at home for $100, it is claimed.

A. P. MEMBERSHIP RECORD

More Than 1,233 Daily Papers Now Members of Cooperative Body

The Associated Press this week established a new high membership record, with 1,233 daily papers listed on its membership rolls. The last previous high was 1,220 in May of this year. At the annual meeting last April there were only 1,218 members.

Last week the Associated Press put its North and South Carolina members on printer circuits. Thirty-five newspapers were affected. W. J. McCambridge, in charge of the traffic department, announced that the Associated Press now has more than 1,000 automatic printer telegraph machines in operation.

TEN BEST PLAYS PICKED

Burns Mantle's Annual Compilation to Be Out Oct. 1

"The Best Plays of 1927-28," annual book of plays edited by Burns Mantle, dramatic editor of the New York Daily News and writer of a theatrical letter for the Chicago Tribune Newspapers Syndicate, will be published by Dodd Mead & Co., Oct. 1.

Plays chosen by Mr. Mantle for this year's publication are: "Broadway," "Chicago"; "The Play's the Thing"; "Saturday's Children"; "In Abraham's Bosom"; "The Constant Wife"; "Daisy Mayme"; "The Silver Cord"; "The Cradle Song" and the "Road to Rome."

BUFFALO RADIO CODE FOR ADVERTISING

Indefinite and Misleading Terms To Be Barred from Copy Under Agreement Made by Local Retailers

Launching a campaign that is to be made national in scope, according to present plans, the Buffalo Radio Trades Association has adopted a code of standards governing "truth in radio advertising." The standards, which the nation's radio trade will be asked to adopt and follow in future advertising are as follows:

First, distance and selectivity claims should be based on average rather than on exceptional performances.

Second, complete means that nothing further need be purchased to operate the set; list price should mean selling price; price quoted should state whether selling price includes accessories.

Third, state total price is down price offers.

Fourth, name the cabinet woods.

Fifth, identify standard equipment by name.

Sixth, guarantee should be stated in clear and simple terms.

Seventh, superlative terms to be eliminated, lack selling force.

Eighth, disparagement of others to be discouraged.

Ninth, claims for quality of tone which are exaggerated destroy confidence.

Tenth, specify number of sets or number of pieces of equipment if they are limited when advertising a special sale.

Eleventh, define claims for interference eliminators.

Twelfth, describe tuning operations adequately.

Thirteenth, the name "static eliminators" unwarranted; should be avoided entirely.

Fourteenth, "seconds" should be branded.

Fifteenth, "from factory to you" should mean sold by the maker to consumer.

Sixteenth, illustrated cuts should be accurate.

Seventeenth, word "free" should be used only when article is free and when it is not necessary to purchase an item to obtain the free one.

SMITH TO HATTIESBURG

Former Consolidated Press Official Now American's Managing Editor

Edward B. Smith, formerly superintendent of the Southern Division of the Consolidated Press Association, has been made managing editor of the Hattiesburg (Miss.) American.

Smith is a graduate of the School of Journalism at the University of Missouri, and spent three years in the Orient on the news staff of the Japan Advertiser and as Far Eastern correspondent for the Christian Science Monitor and the London Daily Express. He was in Tokio during the great Japan earthquake of 1923, and his eye-witness cable to the London Express is credited with being a 24 hour scoop.

He has worked on a number of middle western papers, including the Des Moines Register and St. Louis Star.

As managing editor of the American, Mr. Smith succeeds C. M. Willoughby, a well known Washington newspaper man who died in New Orleans recently.

SPORTSMAN EXONERATED

Larry Dailey, sports editor of the Tulsa (Okla.) Evening World and formerly of the Denver (Col.) Post sports staff, was exonerated and discharged at a preliminary hearing on a second degree manslaughter charge brought after an altercation with W. G. Clark, an oil lease broker, whose death followed. Dailey took exception to remarks by Clark in the presence of women members of the former's party in a Tulsa restaurant.

NEW JOURNALISTIC THUNDERS AGAINST INDIANA POLITICAL DEALS

Indianapolis Star Publishes Letters Involving United States Senators—Other Corruption Cases Now Before State Tribunals

By RICHARD P. OVERMYER
Indianapolis Correspondent of Editor & Publisher

INDIANAPOLIS, Sept. 18.—The citizens of Indiana, jaded and wearied with eleven months' reading of charges and investigations of political chicanery in their state, awoke to a new sensation last Saturday morning when the Indianapolis Star published two letters which may involve United States Senators James E. Watson and Arthur R. Robinson in an attempt to influence the state Supreme Court.

Watson and Robinson, although indirectly linked in the allegations of political corruption which have been under investigation by three grand juries since last October, have thus far escaped direct accusation, except from the Indianapolis Times, of any hand in the various machinations with which the Governor of the state, the mayor of Indianapolis and several other prominent men now stand charged in the courts.

One of the letters printed by the Star Saturday was from the Rev. Edward S. Shumaker, superintendent of the Indiana Anti-Saloon League who was recently sentenced to sixty days on the state penal farm for contempt of the state Supreme Court, to Senator Watson, written in August, 1926. It was in regard to a telephone conversation the two had had the night before, during which Shumaker claims Watson promised him his contempt case would not come up until after election and that when he was tried he would not be sent to jail, but only fined. The other letter, a reply from Watson to Shumaker, denied that the Senator had made any such promise and declared the dry leader must have misunderstood him over the telephone. His letter went into detail in declaring he had never tried to influence a Court and never intended to do so.

It was also in August of last year that Shumaker approached Senator Robinson and asked him what he could do about the case, being especially desirous, according to Robinson, to have it tried at an early date. Robinson declares he told the dry leader that he could do nothing, and that Shumaker then asked him if he would talk to Watson about the case.

Senator Watson is a patient at the Mayo Brothers' sanitarium at Rochester, Minn. He declared by telephone Saturday that he would answer any summons the Supreme court may issue for his testimony. As soon as the letters were published Saturday Arthur L. Gilliom, attorney general, who prosecuted Shumaker originally in the contempt action, petitioned the Court to increase the dry leader's penalty.

The contempt case against Dr. Shumaker resulted from publication in the American Issue, Anti-Saloon League organ, of an article criticizing members of the Indiana Supreme Court for their decisions in liquor law violation cases. The alleged contemptuous statements were included in the report from Indiana for 1925. Gilliom filed an information against Shumaker shortly after, but the case was not tried until last month, eighteen months later.

Publication of the two letters Saturday in the Star came as a climax to a bitter battle between Senator Robinson and the Indianapolis Times. The Times, which has taken a leading part in pushing the whole political probe in Indiana, had obtained photographic copies of the letters. Some time ago the paper began to center its attack on Senator Robinson, intimating in an editorial that he had attempted to influence the Supreme Court. Robinson, in a fiery letter to Boyd Gurley, editor of the Times, demanded retraction of the editorial within three days. The Times replied with further editorial attacks, holding their copies of the letters in reserve to publish as their "proof" of the charges.

The existence of the letters was known to the Indianapolis Star, however, and feeling that the Times was about ready to "spring" them in its attack on Robinson, a representative of the Star obtained the originals and copies of them were printed in the Star Saturday.

The Shumaker-Watson-Robinson angle creates a third phase in the investigations that have held the attention of Indianians and the nation for many months.

The most important result of the long probe was the indictment Sept. 9 of Governor Ed Jackson; George V. Coffin, Indianapolis city and Marion county Republican chairman, and Robert I. Marsh, Ku Klux Klan lawyer and former law partner of the Governor, on charges of bribery. They are charged with having offered Warren T. McCray, when he was Governor in 1923, $10,000 and immunity from prosecution if he would appoint James E. McDonald prosecutor of Marion county. McCray was later convicted of using the mails to defraud and sentenced to the Federal penitentiary at Atlanta, Ga. He was paroled last Aug. 17 and is now living with his family here.

The three men will be arraigned Oct. 3 in Criminal Court. It was announced this week that ex-Governor McCray will be called to testify in the trial. Indiana then will be the scene of the unparalleled spectacle of an ex-Governor, just out of prison, testifying at the trial of his successor.

The other important result of the investigations is the present trial of Mayor John L. Duvall of Indianapolis on a charge of violating the corrupt practices act.

The entire investigation of political fraud and corruption grew out of charges made by Thomas H. Adams, editor of the Vincennes Commercial, who broadcast allegations that D. C. Stephenson, former head of the Klan in Indiana, controlled political affairs of the state from 1922 to 1925.

DUVALL CONVICTED

(By Telegraph to Editor & Publisher)

INDIANAPOLIS, Sept. 22.—Mayor John L. Duvall of Indianapolis was found guilty of violation of the Indiana Corrupt Practices Act by a jury in Criminal Court here at 7:48 o'clock tonight, sentenced to 30 days in the Marion County jail and fined $1,000. The conviction bars him from holding public office for four years.

INDIANA EDITORS SUMMON PEOPLE TO FIGHT FOR CONSTITUTION

Boyd Gurley of Indianapolis Times Commended for Revealing Corruption—"Representative Government on Trial," Committee Declares

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Sept. 18.—Representative government is on trial in the criminal actions against public officials in Indiana, and newspapers can do little except publish the facts and leave the verdict to the people, declared a statement with which representatives of nine newspapers of the state concluded a conference held at the Columbia Club here late last week. The meeting was called by Mrs. Harriet M. Toner of Anderson, publisher of the Anderson Herald and widow of Edward C. Toner.

Discussion of the political situation took place behind closed doors. The statement which came out of the discussion was signed by the Anderson Herald, Richmond Palladium, Rushville Republican, Huntington Herald and Vincennes Commercial.

"We the undersigned committee, representing a group of publishers of Indiana Republican newspapers, have met in Indianapolis today to survey the results of the contest for better government carried on by us, with the assistance of others, for the last sixteen months against political corruption and for the restoration of clean government in the state of Indiana," the statement said.

"In the beginning of this fight, the printed charges of official misconduct and supergovernment were so startling as to be almost unbelievable. But lately, these allegations have found concrete expression in the form of indictments returned by a grand jury of the state and by affidavits filed by officials of Marion county. Thus the fight has progressed beyond the stage of newspaper exposure and has entered the courts.

"Progress has been made, but at present the entire state of Indiana is under indictment and our people are held up to shame for permitting such conditions to exist.

"These charges are true or they are false and those indicted owe it to themselves and to the people of Indiana to go into court promptly and without assistance of legal technicalities, to stand trial on the merits of the issue. If those accused are innocent, their innocence should be made clear, if they are guilty, their guilt should be revealed. But the honor and good name of Indiana should not be hidden behind a statute of limitations.

"This contest is the people's fight against supergovernment. The fight has just begun. There are others who are being weighed in the balance and no guilty person should be allowed to escape. We commit ourselves to a continuance of the policy of presenting the facts concerning political corruption and misgovernment wherever found to exist.

"We hereby make an urgent appeal to all loyal citizens of the state to join in the undertaking that we may restore the rights granted under our constitution. Representative government is now on trial. The newspapers can do little except to publish the facts. The final verdict must rest with the people."

Another announcement of the conclusions of the conference said:

"We commend the capable co-operation of Boyd Gurley, editor of the Indianapolis Times, in fearlessly pursuing and revealing the facts that assisted in unmasking the present deplorable political situation in Indiana.

"We also commend the Indianapolis News and the Indianapolis Star for their wholesome attitude towards the investigation."

Those at the conference, which lasted several hours, were Wallace Williamson, Columbia City Commercial Mail; William H. Kerrigan, Logansport Press; H. E. Garber, Madison Courier; Ed Harris, Richmond Palladium; Walter H. Ball, Huntington Herald; Will O. Fuedner, Rushville Republican; Don M. Nixon, Wabash Plain Dealer; Thomas H. Adams, Vincennes Commercial; Floyd McGriff, manager of the Anderson Herald, Mrs. Toner and her son, William Toner.

Oswald Ryan of Anderson, attorney for the Herald Publishing Company, and William Reller of Richmond, attorney for the Palladium Publishing Company, assisted the editors in drafting the statements. Mr. Ryan was an unsuccessful candidate for the Republican nomination for United States senator in 1926.

FORD STARTS MYSTERY ADVERTISING FAD

Union Tobacco Company Holds Out on Name of New Cigarette and Arouses Curiosity Reflected in News Columns

Secrecy being successfully maintained by N. W. Ayer & Son in connection with the advertising of the new Ford car has led to a new advertising fad. Instead of flooding newspaper news desks with hand-outs on a new product, advertisers are making mysteries of their plans hoping thereby to arouse public curiosity which will be reflected in news columns.

A case in point is the Union Tobacco Company of 511 Fifth avenue, New York, which this week purchased the Melachrino brand of cigarettes. This company has also let it become known that they are planning to pack a new popularly priced brand of cigarettes to enter the 20 for 15 cent market. Already one New York newspaper has given the company gratuitous space, discussing the "forthcoming mystery cigarette."

J. L. Hoffman, an official of the company, admitted that a new cigarette brand was in the making, but declined all details.

"We don't talk about our plans before they happen," he said.

The advertising for Melachrino is now being handled by H. W. Kastor & Sons. This agency refers all queries regarding the "mystery cigarette" back to the company.

Announcement of the purchase of Melachrino was made by the Union Tobacco Company in a full-page advertisement on Sept. 19, reading:

"The Union Tobacco Company, purveyors of better cigarettes and tobaccos beg to announce the purchase of the brand of Melachrino Cigarettes.

"It is the policy of this company to market only brands of outstanding excellence, for which there exists an established and universal demand.

"Not alone in America, but the world over, Melachrino is a synonym for the finest cigarette that can be made."

ROWLEY ADDS TO CHAIN

Ashtabula Publisher Acquires Conneaut (O.) News-Herald

C. A. Rowley, publisher of the Ashtabula (O.) Star-Beacon, has purchased the capital stock of the Conneaut (O.) News-Herald, published by C. S. Putnam and W. E. Putnam. The Putnams will retire from newspaper work.

J. W. Quigley, business manager of the Ashtabula Star-Beacon, has been named general manager of the News-Herald, and G. H. Leggett, Star-Beacon managing editor, business manager.

H. H. Henes, manager of the Painesville (O.) Telegraph, is secretary of the Conneaut News-Herald Company.

Under the new ownership, the Conneaut News-Herald will become a part of the Rowley newspaper chain which has been developed in the past seven years. Mr. Rowley, former owner and publisher of the Lorain (O.) Times-Herald, purchased the Ashtabula Star-Beacon in 1920.

At the same time he acquired the Geneva (O.) Free Press and later bought the Painesville Telegraph.

CHANGES IN PORTLAND, ORE.

With the taking over of the Portland (Ore.) Telegram by C. H. Brockhagen as president and publisher, there have been several staff changes. Among those who have left the Telegram are John L. Travis, general manager, who returns to the Portland Oregonian; Charles Myers, city editor; R. D. Cannon, news editor, and a half dozen writers, including Robert Withrow, on the Telegram staff for the past 20 years; Harold Holmberg, who goes to the Portland Oregon Journal; Patty Cook, head of the domestic science department, and others. Henry Hansen, political editor, who left the Telegram some months ago, returns under the new management.

SAN DIEGO TURNED TO NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING TO SPEED LOCAL TRADE

Full Pages in Dailies Credited with Bringing Thousands to City—Building Permits Up from Three to Twenty Millions—Cost Per Inquiry Only $1.45

By HAROLD J. ASHE

NEWSPAPERS are one of the principal advertising mediums depended upon by the San Diego-California Club in exploiting the southern California metropolis.

San Diego, Cal., is believed to be one of the first to undertake a community advertising campaign, and to create an organization for that special purpose. It was during the days of 1919, after the Armistice was signed, that the San Diego-California Club, pioneer community advertising club, was formed.

Attractive full page copy placed by the San Diego-California Club in Los Angeles dailies

The community advertising campaign has been conducted every season since 1919, with the exception of 1924-25, when very little advertising was done, but the follow-up work of the Club was carried on.

It is interesting to note that coupons from ads published back in 1920 are still coming in to the San Diego-California Club. People who have answered the ads during the first few years of the Club's campaign are just coming to San Diego. During the interval of six or seven years since they read the first advertisement, they have been dreaming of southern California, while shaping their affairs in order that they could move west.

Few more striking testimonials to the pulling power of good advertising can be found that such examples as these tourists and new residents afford.

Last year the San Diego-California Club was made the community advertising branch of the San Diego Chamber of Commerce, which is now carrying the overhead of the organization, allowing it to devote the funds almost entirely to advertising and publicity.

Tying in with newspaper advertisements was a highway representative, who was virtually a traveling agent for the automobile tourist. This representative supplied the motorist with maps and up-to-date information on road conditions in the state.

Newspaper advertising was used especially in the interior states of the Southwest, telling of the recreational features to be enjoyed on the shores of the Pacific.

A coupon is run in every advertisement and an elaborate follow-up system is employed by the Club. Upon receipt of the coupon, the inquirer is mailed a little booklet, "The Romantic Story of San Diego," a folder of views, and a questionnaire card. He fills out this post-card, indicating whether he plans to visit San Diego or to move there, if so, how soon, his occupation, and what particular information he desires.

If the questionnaire card is returned, a booklet of facts about the city and county is mailed to the person. Other pieces of literature are also available, such as an agricultural survey, mineral survey, manufacturers' directory, and publications on climate, health, mountain resorts, and the various beaches.

The past season, despite great competition in the field of community advertising, the San Diego-California Club's inquiry cost was $1.45, which was lower than any of the preceding campaigns. When people come to San Diego in response to the Club's advertising, they are asked to register at the San Diego-California Club. Of course only a relatively small percentage take the trouble to register, but even on this basis, the estimated cost of bringing a family to San Diego has been in the neighborhood of $52.

In the past, the story told in the San Diego-California Club's advertising was a story of the beauties of the southern California city, of its charming climate and of its opportunities for recreation, etc. In other words, it was largely an appeal to the tourists and the people of retirement. This coming year it is planned to make the advertising program one of development. While the Club will still make an appeal to tourists and the people who can afford to retire and settle in a climate that is delightful the year around, a play will also be made to people interested in commercial and industrial development.

San Diego has passed beyond the stage of a tourist city or a city of retirement, into one of commerce and industry. It is necessary to balance the growth of the city with the commercial and industrial factors. It is recognized that it has rich mineral and agricultural resources, and a great natural harbor. Opportunities for the development of these basic resources will be portrayed in the new advertising program of the San Diego-California Club.

For the first time this last year a good share of the advertising was placed in Los Angeles newspapers. Perhaps even a larger share will be placed there again this year, on the assumption that the great bulk of the people who come to California come first to Los Angeles, and then look around for a place to live or to make their investments. It is believed that in Los Angeles a large body of people can be reached who have not definitely settled upon a place to go, and who can be brought down the 120 miles of coast to San Diego much easier than they can be brought across the 2,000 miles of continent.

Funds for the San Diego-California Club in the past have been subscribed by San Diego business men and the large commercial institutions in the city. Last year the County Board of Supervisors made a small appropriation, and this year it is expected that 1½ cents per $100 will be appropriated from the county funds, and in January another appropriation will be made from the city coffers. This money will be the foundation of the fund, which still must be made up in the bulk by popular subscription. Last year funds were raised by a drive, but this year this expense is being eliminated, and the subscriptions of a year ago being renewed, and new subscriptions gradually solicited.

PHILIP PAYNE HAILED AS PIONEER

Picture to Hang in Newspaper Club—Framed in Text "I Won't Send Men Where I Wouldn't Go Myself"

The Board of Directors of the Newspaper Club of New York, last week adopted the following resolution of which an embossed copy will be sent to Mrs. Philip Alan Payne, the widow of the late Mr. Payne, managing editor of the New York Daily Mirror, who lost his life on the airplane "Old Glory":

PHILIP A. PAYNE

"WHEREAS, the very basis of the newspaper profession is builded upon sacred traditions, sacrifice personal and collective integrity, courage and convictions of that which is right as each of us is given to see the right; and

"WHEREAS, members of the craft should, and do, strive to judge men and achievement through an understanding insight, which weighs the spiritual intent rather than the material result; and

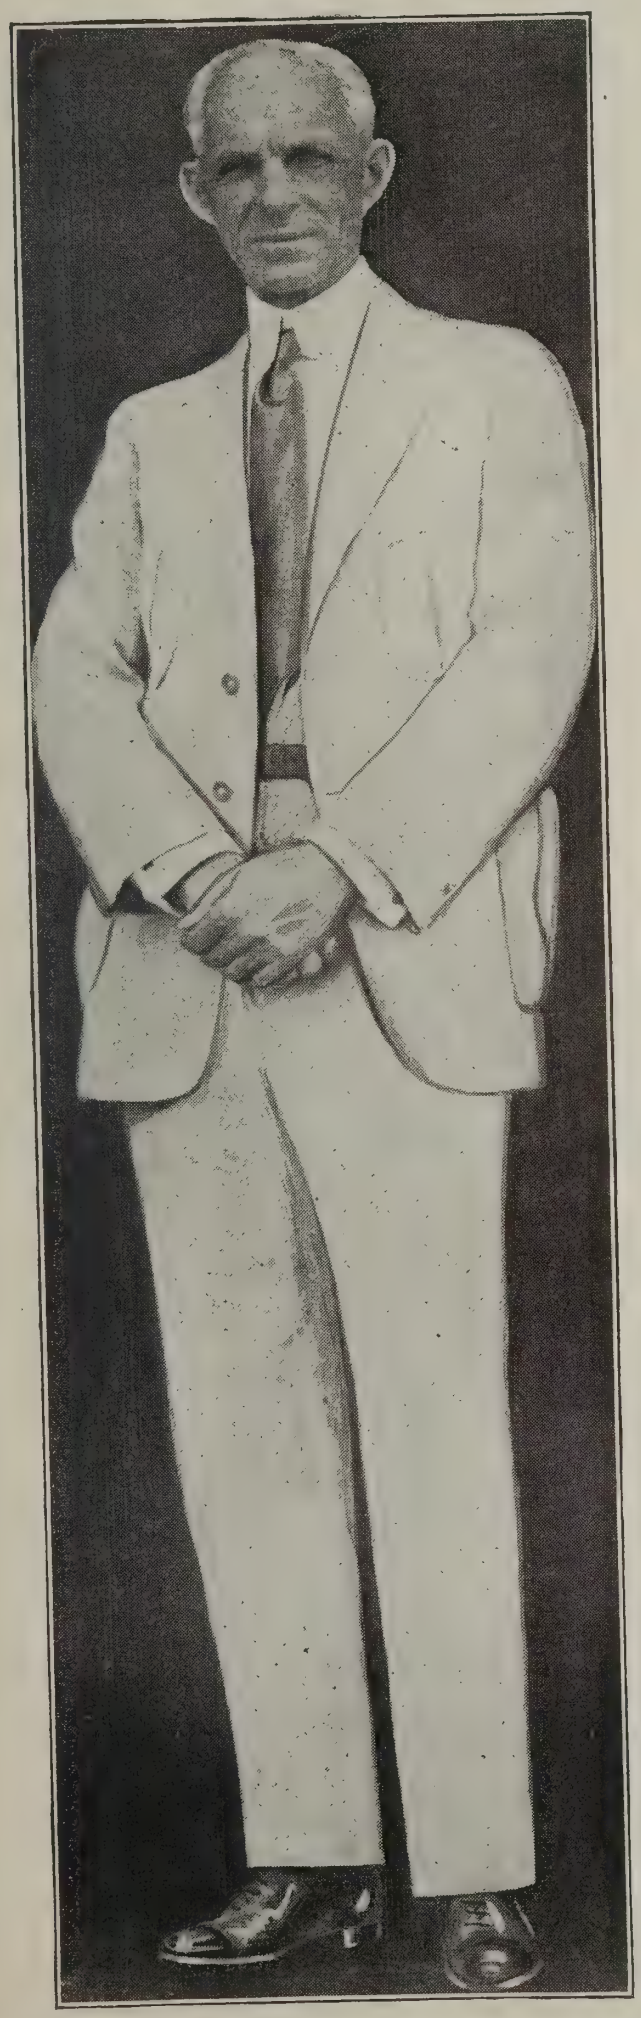
"WHEREAS, Philip Alan Payne, member of the Newspaper Club of New York and managing editor of the New York Daily Mirror, in our opinion, embodied in his brilliant career all of those qualities that we of the craft hold admirable and gave his life gallantly, an American pioneer, to a cause in which he had nothing to gain personally, and all to lose; therefore,

"BE IT RESOLVED that the Newspaper Club of New York sees, and feels, in the loss of Philip Alan Payne and his brave companions, Lloyd W. Bertaud and J. D. Hill, in the New York-to-Rome airplane Old Glory, triumph rather than defeat, a legacy of honor and courage to our profession, which will further enrich our traditions; and,

"BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that copies of these resolutions be sent to Mr. Payne's family, to members of the craft to whom his loss is a tragic inspiration to higher and nobler things; and that Mr. Payne's portrait be added to the gallery of honor and achievement in the club house, bearing suitable inscription and the text of Mr. Payne's message to his father, a text for which the newspaper profession has understanding and high honor and which message read:

"I WILL NOT SEND MEN WHERE I WON'T GO MYSELF."

DONATE AVIATION PRIZES



Three Coast Newspapers Offer Costly Cups in Seattle Air Derby

Newspaper publishers of the West are donors of handsome trophies in the Spokane aviation carnival to be held at Spokane, Wash., Sept. 21 to 28, at the conclusion of the New York to Spokane Air Derby. A principal prize is the Seattle (Wash.) Times cup costing $2,000 for the winner of the National Guard pursuit race. W. H. Cowles, publisher of the Spokane Spokesman-Review, has donated a cup costing $2,000 for the winner of the army, navy and marine pursuit race. The San Francisco Bulletin has offered a $1,000 trophy to the winner of the San Francisco to Spokane race.

AD CLUB TO FETE MAYOR

When Mayor James J. Walker of New Yorks returns from his European trip, he will be welcomed by the Advertising Club of New York as "a world-wide advertising man." This week, Gilbert T. Hodges, New York Sun, and president of the club, announced a luncheon to be given to the Mayor at the Hotel Astor, Sept. 28.

What Is Ford Doing?

Spending $22,000,000 in Enlarging Plant to Make 12,000 Cars a Day

A Car Every Seven and Two-Tenths Seconds

THIS is the answer to the most widely discussed question of the year. Henry Ford is getting ready for the world's greatest automobile production.

He is increasing his factory space by more than 50 acres of new buildings—that is land area; floor space is, of course, much greater—and all this means more people at work in the Detroit area — more money in circulation to buy goods.

Soon the 24-hour day will again be in effect. These facts are taken from a Detroit News interview with Mr. Ford and substantiated by an inspection of the plant; they're not rumors.

With these facts serving you ample notice of what's going to happen in America's fourth market, are you arranging your Detroit advertising schedule effectively?

Remember that this field has always been thoroughly covered by one newspaper—The Detroit News—which today reaches 82% of all English newspaper reading homes — a situation that enables you to employ dominating space in one medium and thus adequately sell the whole market.

MAGAZINE SOLICITORS CURBED BY CITIES

Publishers Also Discuss 25 Per Cent Duty Imposed by Canada— Meeting Re-elects Baldwin

Subjects of special interest to magazine publishers were discussed at the Eighth Annual meeting of the National Publishers Association, held at Buckwood Inn, Shawnee-on-Delaware, Pa., Sept. 20-21. A. J. Baldwin, McGraw-Hill Publishing Company, was re-elected president.

At the business session A. D. Mayo, vice-president of the association, and secretary of the Crowell Publishing Company, acted as chairman. The condition of the finances was embodied in a report submitted by Roger W. Allen of the finance committee and showed that the finances of the association were in excellent condition. The general activities of the association during the past year were reviewed by the executive secretary, George C. Lucas.

An analysis of the wage situation in the printing industry in New York was presented by John Clyde Oswald, managing director of the New York Employing Printers Association. He stated that the three-year contracts with Typographical and the Pressmen's unions expire October 1.

Among the demands which the unions had made were a reduction of hours from 44 hours to 40 hours a week, an increase of $10 a week, and numerous minor adjustments. He further stated that the employing printers had refused absolutely to enter into negotiations for renewal of any contracts until the unions had abandoned their demand for the 40-hour week.

Problems of considerable concern to publishers of general magazines, involving the difficulties encountered by subscription agents, were explained by T. J. Buttikofer, of the International Magazine Company. He called attention to the increasing number of ordinances being passed by municipal authorities restricting the operations of periodical solicitors.

Although the Supreme Court had declared such licenses, even if no fee was demanded, unconstitutional and interfering with interstate commerce, nevertheless local demands are being made to enforce them.

It was the opinion of the meeting that the Association should do whatever was necessary to protect the interests of all publishers who are confronted with this problem.

Discussion developed in connection with the recent regulation of the Board of Customs of Canada imposing a 25 per cent duty on magazines entering Canada which did not contain articles of current comment or news. Such magazines previously entered Canada free of duty, but under the recent interpretation of the Canadian Commissioner of Customs they are reclassified as unbound novels and are therefore not permitted to enter free. It was the opinion of the meeting that this was the first step of the Canadian authorities to meet the demands of certain interests in Canada who desired to place a duty on all United States magazines, making their sale price in Canada prohibitive.

Probably the most interesting discussion followed the presentation of the report of the copyright committee. This was presented by Roger W. Allen, chairman, and he was followed by Frederick S. Bigelow, associate editor of the Saturday Evening Post, who gave an analysis of the bills which were presented in Congress last year providing for complete revision of our present copyright laws. He explained in detail the effect of having automatic copyright, divisibility of copyright, and onerous damages for innocent infringement.

A. C. Pearson, chairman of the Postal Committee and chairman of the board of directors of the United Publishers Corporation, reviewed the work done by the association during the past year in an effort to have Congress pass a bill reducing the rates on second class mail to those in effect in 1920. He emphasized the fact that although magazine publishers would be affected by reductions in the rates on other classes of mail, nevertheless their chief interest was in second class rates and that the campaign of the association would be entered on obtaining at least the rates that were in effect in 1920.

William I. Denning and William L. Daley, Washington representatives of the National Publishers Association, presented interesting facts in regard to the attitude of Congressmen and the Post Office Department on the revision of second class postal rates.

Mr. Oswald asked the support of publishers in obtaining representation of periodical interests on the International Press Congress at Cologne in 1928.

Other officers elected were: A. D. Mayo, Crowell Publishing Company, 1st vice-president; P. S. Collins, Curtis Publishing Company, 2nd vice-president; F. L. Wurzburg, Conde Nast Publications, secretary, and Roger W. Allen, Allen Business Papers.

Directors, Charles Dana Gibson, Life; Guy L. Harrington, Macfadden Publications; B. A. MacKinnon, Pictorial Review; Malcolm Muir, McGraw-Hill Publishing Company; Henry W. Newhall, Modern Priscilla; M. C. Robbins, Robbins Publishing Company.

Others attending were: A. S. Armagnac, Heating and Ventilating Magazine; W. E. Beckerle, Conde Nast Publications; Francis Brewster, Asia; J. C. Brimblecom, National Editorial Association; O. B. Capen, Popular Science Monthly; H. R. Clifford, Clifford & Lawton; Lester Cuddihy, Literary Digest; L. D. Fernald, Conde Nast Publications; E. BUYS TAMPA PLANT

J. A. Stevens, publisher of the Tampa Daily Record, has purchased the plant of the Tampa Evening Journal, which suspended publication some time ago, he announced this week. The plant, at Ross and Nebraska avenues, was owned by Jose Marina, and formerly operated by the Latin-American Publishing Company. Mr. Stevens stated that the equipment will be operated as a commercial plant for the time being. In addition to the daily, he plans to issue a monthly publication to be known as the Commercial Review.

—on the growth of the Akron Market which has made our new home possible.

We have looked years into the future, altho basing our plans on past performances, and have seen a definite need for a home such as this one into which we will move this month.

Mechanical limitations have held down the size of our issues to the extent that we have often had to turn away advertising copy, to maintain the proper ratio between news matter and advertising copy, a ratio we have guarded jealously in the best interests of our readers.

In spite of our limitations, we have won the position of ranking first in Ohio and sixth in the U. S. in advertising linage among six day newspapers.

The new building is designed for five stories, with utmost efficiency and speed the keynote. The press capacity is 112 pages at the rate of 72,000 per hour, fully adequate for the demands of this growing Akron Market.

An Answer to The Detroit News on Building Advertising

IN an advertisement printed thus far in the Sept. 10th issue of Editor & Publisher; the Sept. 7th issue of Advertising & Selling and the Sept. 8th issue of Printer's Ink, The Detroit News says "Five of the six insulation advertisers in the Detroit field use The Detroit News; three of them employing the News exclusively. The local builders—those on the ground—place the bulk of their advertising in The Detroit News. During the first half of 1927 The News carried 16,000 lines more builders' advertising than both competitors combined."

Using The Detroit News own figures recently published in a booklet, giving lineage figures in Detroit for the first half of 1927 you will find on the first count that there are NOT "six insulation advertisers" but EIGHT. FOUR of these EIGHT used The Free Press exclusively as follows: Balsam Wool 6552 lines; Masonite 2128 lines; Johns Manville 6244 lines; flaxlinum 9240 lines. TWO of the EIGHT used The News exclusively—Beaver Bestwall 11704 lines and Cornell Wood Products 1680 lines. Of the other two, Celotex used more than twice as much space in The Free Press while the other, Insulite, used The News and Detroit Times. Mind you, these are not Free Press figures, but those compiled by The Detroit News itself.

On the second count, again using The News own figures, The Free Press carried 10,920 lines more of builders' and builders supply advertising than did The News, which clearly establishes the fact that The Free Press is FIRST in building advertising in Detroit.

Furthermore, many of the largest and most important builders' supply advertisers use The Free Press exclusively. Here is a partial list of advertisers in this classification who placed ALL of their advertising for the first half of the year in the Free Press—these again being quoted from The News booklet.

Williams Oil O Matic Oil Burner
Nokol Oil Burner
Vogt Refrigerators
Bonded Floors Inc.
Kewanee Boilers
American Blower Co.

Chicago Faucets
The Austin Co.
Timken Oil Burner
Copeland Refrigerators
Mich. Builders Supply
Penberthy Oil Burner
Quiet May Oil Burner
Stover Water Softener
ABC Oil Burner
Johnston Paint & Glass Co.

The Free Press does not seek through its own advertising to belittle competitors in any effort to build itself, but when ambiguous statements are made by its competitors, this newspaper must defend itself.

Not only is The Free Press FIRST in the advertising classification "Builders and Builders' Supplies," but in the closely related classification of "Real Estate," The Free Press printed during the first half of 1927 more advertising than both its other competitors combined.

PRESS NEEDN'T SPEAK IN BATED BREATH ON POLITICS, OREGON COURT HOLDS

Blows to Be Given as Well as Received, Says Appellate Justice Reversing Libel Verdict Against Coos Bay Times

"WHEN a man enters the political arena, even though not a candidate, he must not be too sensitive. There are generally blows to receive as well as blows to give."

This excerpt is indicative of the general effect of a decision returned a few days ago by Justice Belt of the Oregon Supreme Court. It is a decision that illustrates, perhaps as well as any case that has gone through the American courts, the changing attitude which gives newspapers a broad latitude of expression in dealing with those who are concerned in political affairs.

Continuing, the Oregon jurist says: "While a newspaper, under the guise of qualified privilege, has no right to defame a person or to injure that which is his most valuable property right—a good name—it is no longer, in reference to matters of public interest, obliged to speak with bated breath."

This decision, which defines so liberally a newspaper's right to say about what it pleases in a give and take political fight, was made in reversing a lower court judgment in a libel action that has been filed in Marshfield, Ore., by A. K. Peck, an attorney of that place, against the Coos Bay Times Publishing company. Peck in the lower court had won a libel judgment of $1,500.

Peck's libel suit was based on two editorials in the Times in which Peck was branded as the dictator of politics in Coos County and pictured as one who ranked high in the Ku Klux Klan. The editorials had appeared in the Times after the Southwestern Oregon Daily News, a rival paper of which Peck was a director, had criticized Walter M. Pierce, then governor of Oregon, for failure to appoint one J. A. Norton as a member of the State Highway commission.

Indicating the tone of the editorial on which the original libel was allowed is the following excerpt:

"Peck has sought to promote his political fortune and prestige by appeals to the basest of all political emotions, that of hate. He has in some manner succeeded in surrounding himself with others who ignorantly or indifferently accept his poisonous propaganda. The attack made (referring to an attack on Dan E. Maloney, editor of the Coos Bay Times) was a direct result of this attitude of bigotry. If Peck and his henchmen think they can silence the Times by assaults upon its editors or by an attempted reign of terrorism, they are as much in error as they are in the propaganda they are spreading."

"The Coos Bay Times as a newspaper, reads the Supreme Court decision, "had the right to make fair comment and criticism upon the plaintiff's alleged unreliability in political matters affecting public interest, and it was also within its province to criticize his advocacy of doctrines which it deemed to be fallacious and inimical to the public welfare.

"The greater portion of the articles constitute an attack upon the Ku Klux Klan and upon Peck by reason of his alleged affiliation with such organization. While Peck was not a candidate for office nor did he occupy a public position, it appears from the record that he was a leader in political activities and, therefore, invited more or less criticism from those who were not his supporters."

Then follows the dictum on a newspaper's right to comment on political matters without it being necessary "to speak with bated breath."

When Bob Garland, N. Y. Telegram, Vacations, No One Takes His Place

Editors of the Telegram posted the following notice under the column's title line:

"Bob Garland has gone on a deserved vacation and nobody is going to make any attempt to pinch-hit for him. The Telegram hopes he has a bully good time and comes back rested, refreshed in mind and body and ready to go about his daily joy-ride with the readers of his column. In the meantime, we will try to fill this space with something interesting, even though different."

Garland came to the Evening Telegram from the city staff of the Baltimore Evening Post.

COCHRAN IS ARRESTED AFTER BOND ISSUE

Postal Warrant Charges Fraud in Sale of St. Paul German Paper's Securities—Lorenz and Others Also Named

Clarence A. Cochran, a financial promoter who is accused of defrauding thousands of persons living in the vicinity of St. Paul, Minn., of amounts totaling $2,000,000, was arrested in Chicago Sept. 16, by postal inspectors. He has been sought since last May.

Named in the warrant with Cochran is Arthur Lorenz, former editor of the Illinois Staats-Zeitung, Chicago. According to officials, Cochran and a number of others gained control of the Volkszeitung Printing & Publishing Company. They are charged with issuing bonds and borrowing $2,000,000, most of which was on promissory notes, from their subscribers.

Cochran is charged with being the head of the plot in which thirty others participated. He was arrested on a warrant accusing him of using the mails in a scheme to defraud. His bonds were set at $10,000, pending a hearing on his removal to Minnesota.

TO BUILD MODEL HOMES

In order to encourage home construction and ownership in the radius of its influence, the Portland Oregonian will construct two model houses, widely different in character, in the next few months.

NATIONAL advertisers are becoming acutely interested in the unjust differential existing between their rate and the rate given to the local advertiser.

Practically alone among Metropolitan dailies, the Boston Evening Transcript has held to a uniform rate for both national and local advertising.

CENTRAL STATES CIRCULATORS HOLD MEETING AS A SCHOOLROOM

Members Called by Chairman to Tell What They Know—Formal "Papers" Barred—Motor Deliveries for P. M. Rural Routes Held Too Costly

THE program committee of the Central States Circulation Managers' Association which held its fall meeting at the Congress Hotel in Chicago, Sept. 20, adopted a new policy and instead of assigning subject papers to members, conducted the meeting in the form of a school with the teacher at the head of the class asking each member in attendance for a recitation on any of the listed subjects. The round-table discussions proved stimulating and resulted in the exchange of dozens of ideas on every phase of circulation.

J. N. Eisenlord, director of circulation for the Chicago Daily News, called the outlook for fall business better than ever.

It was the opinion of the members at the meeting that the maintenance of motor delivery by afternoon papers for rural subscribers was too expensive.

It was decided to send a questionnaire to the members to get their vote on whether they preferred to have a two-day meeting in the spring and a one-day meeting in the fall; or a three-day spring meeting and no fall meeting, or a two-day meeting in the spring and another two-day meeting in the fall. The secretary was instructed to send out the questionnaire.

The meeting was divided into the following sections: City circulation, mail circulation, agents, and general circulation. Under city circulation, the following problems were threshed out: Methods of carrier delivery; methods of carrier collections; carrier delivery of more than one edition; outline actual work of district men; office-owned route sysems; carrier and street sellers welfare; effect on circulation of early afternoon delivery; methods of bonding carriers; best carrier prizes; carrier promotion contests; carrier honor roll; systems used in keeping subscriber records in office; carrier and newsdealer associations; telephone solicitations; solicitor costs—with and without premiums; newsstands, importance of prompt delivery, methods of collections, promotion efforts and newsdealer co-operation; street sales, salary or commission paid supervisor, corner box sales, baseball extras, possibility of combined effort of evening papers for earlier start of baseball games.

In the mail circulation division, the following subjects were discussed: auto delivery on motor routes; zone rates; predated editions, press time, benefits; soliciting cost; suggestions for direct mail solicitation; commission allowed postmasters as compared to direct solicitors; county representatives; magazine club offers; premiums; bargain periods.

In the agents division, the following subjects were taken up: Transportation, buses and truck delivery; home delivery, agencies vs. direct carriers, necessity of and methods of bonding, net rates, actual work of road men, methods of return check-up, payment of salaries, road men buying agents' surplus, competing with local dailies and using club offers.

The subjects discussed under general circulation were: Systems—does no-return basis retard progress; is a daily page of comics justifiable; what percentage of circulation gross revenue should be net earnings; circulation department helps in classified building; value of daily vital statistics; competing with big city dailies; competing with lower priced competitors; editorial co-operation; Sunday features; value of high figures at present high cost to obtain A. B. C. rulings; Promotion—general contests; premiums, best promotion without premiums, serial stories, insurance, cut subscription rates, sample copies, recording systems of general prize offers, records to hold contract subscribers to period signed for.

The meeting was opened with an address by President Paul J. Kienzle, Springfield (Ill.) State Journal, followed by reports of the board of directors, program committee, auditor, secretary-treasurer, membership committee, bulletin committee, and welfare committee.

Officers of the C. S. C. M. A. are: Mr. Kienzle, president; Horace Payne, Muncie Star, vice-president; H. W. Stodghill, Louisville Courier-Journal and Times, secretary-treasurer; James J. Morrisey, Joliet Herald-News; W. C. Mercier, Ft. Wayne Journal-Gazette; E. C. Hewes, C. D. O'Rourke, Indianapolis Times, and C. K. Jefferson, board of directors. The committee chairmen are: Horace Payne, membership; C. D. O'Rourke, program; H. W. Stodghill, bulletin; James J. Morrisey, legislative; C. K. Jefferson, welfare, and W. C. Mercier, audit.

New General Motors Car to Battle for Low Priced Field

In the low-priced automobile field the forthcoming "battle of billionaires" will be chiefly between Ford and Chevrolet.

"The answer of General Motors to Henry Ford's new car is a new Chevrolet," John J. Leary, Jr., reported in a Detroit dispatch to the New York World on Sept. 12. Mr. Leary wrote that the new Chevrolet, a four-cylinder car, was now being tested and that as a sort of "ace in the hole" a six-cylinder car of the same make has been turned out in the event that Ford's mysterious new offering demands this type of competition.

"Ford's selling organization in the past produced results without much help from the home office," Leary wrote, "save in the matter of price and excellence of product. This year its members will have the advantage of a $15,000,000 advertising campaign. Whether it will stand up in the face of the harder fight after months of comparative idleness is a question that remains to be answered."

COAST HEARST MEN MEET

A two-day convention of publishers, advertising men and circulation managers of W. R. Hearst newspapers in Pacific Coast cities was held at Seattle, Sept. 12 and 13. One of the major topics of discussion was the promotion of prosperity along the entire Pacific Empire by treating the coast and the coastal cities as one entity.

COPY BOY GRADUATES

James Cannon Now Writing Signed Stories for N. Y. News

A year ago James Cannon, 18, began work as a copy boy for the New York Daily News. Now he is a regular reporter on the staff of that tabloid and, within a month, has had three signed stories to his credit.

"I like to play with words," he said this week.

He had this "like" in mind when, after two years in high school he left to get work on a newspaper. He worked for the New York World first, found he wasn't getting ahead fast enough and switched to the News.

On the News he was copy boy on the "lobster shift." That meant he worked almost all night. Daytimes he didn't always go home. Instead he often waited around the day city editor asking him if there wasn't some assignment he could do.

One day there broke a freak human interest story about a young boy who had followed his runaway sister from state to state to bring her home. He had succeeded and, maybe it was worth a stick. Cannon was assigned to the story.

What he turned in merited and got a two column head and a by-line. Immediately thereafter Cannon was issued his police card, as a regular news reporter.

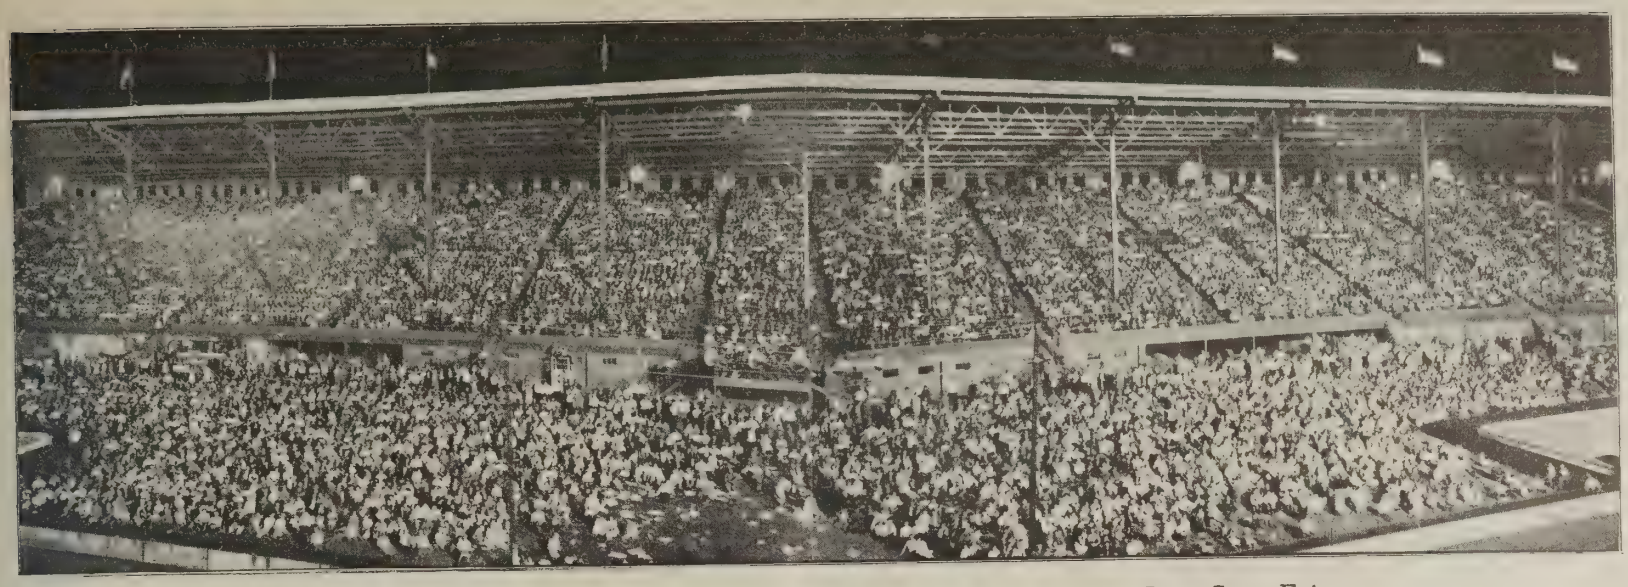
The Profit-Making Side of Your Business

EVERY successful business has its profit-making side. That of your newspaper is linage, a factor that is governed to a marked degree by the appearance of its pages. It, therefore, pays to be sure that it reflects the prestige you wish your paper to convey at all times.

You can be sure that the pages of your newspaper will meet the requirements of the most exacting advertisers, and thus create a preference for your paper, simply by using the Ludlow. With the Ludlow you can give your advertisers freshly-cast faces every day in a wide range of choice styles, and in sizes ranging up to full-width 72 point, in unlimited quantities without storage. Always-new faces create an atmosphere of snappy freshness so essential to the paper that leads or wishes to lead in linage.

Ludlow typefaces lend beauty to the printed page. They are not distorted, but are full-width and symmetrical. Free use may be made of Ludlow italics, with their full-kerning effect, as there are no kerns to break off. Graceful Ludlow swashes and other faces, regarded before the advent of the Ludlow as too delicate for general use, can be cast as needed, the same as roman faces.



We will gladly tell you more about the profit-making side of the Ludlow. Just ask us for the complete facts.

Grandstand crowds at the recent Iowa State Fair---over 13,000 people in this picture

Multiply this crowd sixteen times

---and you will still be some thousands short of the enormous Iowa circulation of The Des Moines Register and Tribune-Capital

The Iowa State Fair, barometer of prosperity in Iowa, has just closed, after breaking all records for attendance. 429,000 people passed through the gates this year---60,000 more paid admissions than a year ago. Manufacturers exhibiting at the fair reported larger sales and larger numbers of new prospects than at at any time in many seasons. A big year is opening up in Iowa.

With over 220,000 daily circulation in a state of 2,500,000 population--The Des Moines Register and Tribune-Capital has set a new record for thoroughness of newspaper coverage. It reaches EVERY home in Des Moines; nearly every home in the Des Moines retail trading area; and sufficient numbers elsewhere in Iowa to substantially influence the buying habits of the entire state.

New York City

Gentlemen:

We have just closed the first ten weeks of our advertising effort in New York City, on Bean Hole Beans, and because we have used THE WORLD exclusively, you will undoubtedly be interested in the results of the campaign so far

After studying the survey of Greater New York, we determined to centre our efforts on approximately 14,000 of the total 21,000 retail outlets of the city. During the five weeks prior to the appearance of our first gravure advertisement, we sold approximately 8,000 of these 14,000 outlets. This gave us almost 60% distribution of the desirable outlets, and located them strategically in each of New York's sales districts, so that our advertising would bring maximum pressure on each outlet stocking our product.

This distribution was effected through the very competent work of 35 salesmen, backed by the co-operation of your Merchandising Department.

As you know, our only advertising appropriation in New York was $25,000, all of which was expended in THE SUNDAY WORLD Gravure, with supporting black-and-white copy in THE EVENING WORLD.

The primary effect of this campaign was the sale of 50,000 cases of Bean Hole Beans within a period of ten weeks. This was a volume beyond our expectation, in a market which we had originally believed would require an investment of at least $150,000 in a number of New York newspapers.

Each week since the launching of our advertising has seen a steady increase in the number of cases sold per week, until in the tenth week the volume amounted to three times the number of cases set as a weekly quota. It is interesting to note in this connection that over 60% of our present volume consists of repeat orders.

Our analysis indicates that this is one of the most outstanding jobs we have done in any city in the United States, and, inasmuch as THE WORLD was used exclusively, we think that you will be equally proud of it.

Two fundamental reasons have undoubtedly made possible this success:

First, the outstanding quality of Bean Hole Beans, a factor which accounts for the "consumer repeat," after once trying the product;

Second, the factor that THE WORLD has so distributed our advertising pressure that acceptance for Bean Hole Beans was started simultaneously among people in all walks of life, because, as you pointed out, THE WORLD reaches the same proportion of families in the "High," "Medium" and "Low" expenditure groups of population. The fact that our repeat volume has come evenly from all parts of the city is the best possible proof of this evenness of WORLD merchandising pressure.

Very truly yours,
VAN CAMP'S

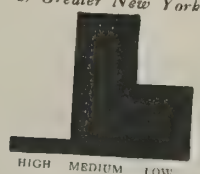
America's Greatest Market

What Van Camp's Has Done With Bean Hole Beans in New York Any Other Manufacturer Can Do



THE letter opposite describes one of the greatest single-paper advertising campaigns ever waged in America's largest retail market—a campaign planned originally upon the merchandising data compiled by THE WORLD and subsequently backed up by the survey of newspaper reading habits of Greater New York, made at the request of THE WORLD by New York University. It was shown by searching inquiry in every section of the city that the distribution of THE WORLD paralleled to a marked degree the city's opportunities for volume sales. How important this fact is in the case of WORLD SERVICE, in accomplishing at a minimum of expense a task that has deterred many manufacturers because of its assumed magnitude, is revealed in the following charts, based upon a division of the city into three expenditure groups, as follows.

The Co-Incidence of the Above Charts Indicates the Even Selling Pressure Exerted by WORLD SERVICE on Every Type of New York Home

WE HAVE above the chief factors governing the efficient distribution of merchandise of every character in Greater New York.

In the chart to the left we have the division of the city's population according to its ability to buy, as revealed by the New York University survey. This is the yardstick by which New York newspaper values must inevitably be measured.

In the chart to the right we have the distribution of the retail grocery outlets of the city divided as to their location in accordance with the city's three expenditure groups.

In the middle charts we have the distribution of THE WORLD, weekday and Sunday, and THE EVENING WORLD, as applied to the three expenditure groups—a practical parallel in coverage both as to population and retail grocery outlets.

The deduction is obvious, and was the governing factor in determining Van Camp's to place their entire dependence upon WORLD SERVICE—that its circulation in New York is so evenly distributed that it exerts upon retailer and consumer alike a maximum of selling pressure. Primarily, the effect of WORLD SERVICE placed Bean Hole Beans on the retailers' shelves. This was the result of sound merchandising, aided by the University survey. Subsequently, it moved the stock off the dealers' shelves and into the hands of the consumer—the outstanding test of any newspaper's ability to sell goods. This was the proof of the correctness of the survey's deduction, that the even, city-wide pressure of THE WORLD'S circulation paralleled the city's opportunities for volume sales.

The merchandising service and the data on which it is based is available to any manufacturer who desires to enter the New York market at a minimum of expense.

DAILY CREATED A BIG SWIM MAN AS CIRCULATION PROMOTION STUNT

"Pigskin" Peters, in the Flesh, Featured as Lake Marathon Entrant—Daily Humorous Stories and Cartoons Made Him Known to Entire Province of Ontario

THE Toronto Daily Star recently sponsored an unusual promotion enterprise. The $50,000 marathon swim (21 miles) for the championship of the world was held at Toronto on Aug. 31, in front of the Canadian National Exhibition. The event not only attracted a huge crowd, but it aroused extraordinary interest everywhere in Toronto and throughout Ontario in the Star's circulation area.

The "Big Swim Man"

On Aug. 6, in the Star Weekly (Sunday edition of the Daily Star) a staff cartoonist, Frise, ran a big cartoon showing "Pigskin" Peters, training at Birdseye Center for the big marathon swim. Birdseye Center is the name of an imaginary village in Ontario which is the locale of many of Frise's drawings. On Aug. 20, the Star Weekly had another big cartoon on "Pigskin." The feature was then shifted over to the Daily with a story every day, illustrated by Frise, on "Pigskin's" preparations for the swim at his secret camp "somewhere on Lake Ontario."

On the Saturday preceding the swim the Star put out on the streets an old truck with a punt and with "Pigskin" Peters himself, together with the other characters which had been built up in the stories and in the cartoons, including "Pigskin's" trainer, Abner Applejohn; his cook, Mrs. Abigail Applejohn; his violinist, Stradivarus Stubbs, and his duck mascot, Oswald. This queer contraption, passing through the streets, attracted wide attention. The outfit went to two ball games; at one of them "Pigskin" pitched the first ball, and at the other (the International League) he took his place at bat. "Pigskin" and his attendants then went on to the Canadian National Exhibition where, before a great crowd of people, he made a trial swim.

On the day before the actual marathon the outfit again went through the streets of Toronto, ending up at the Canadian National Exhibition grounds where a camp was pitched at the waterfront and "Pigskin" Peters stayed all night. On the morning of the swim, he went among the other swimmers getting ready, and then actually entered the contest, accompanied by his retinue in the punt. He swam the first mile and then disappeared, coming around again in the afternoon just a quarter of a mile behind Vierkoetter, the eventual winner.

The stories throughout were illustrated not only by the cartoons, but by many actual photographs, including one of "Pigskin" Peters shaking hands with the Prime Minister of Canada.

The feature aroused extraordinary attention all over the province, fitting in psychologically with an event of great public interest. As a result, "Pigskin" Peters is one of the best known names in the province of Ontario. He is being invited to visit various towns throughout the province where he is giving demonstrations at Kiwanis carnivals and similar celebrations, with credit given to the Star.

The feature was under the direction of Main Johnson, promotion eiditor.

LIEF SELLS TWO PLAYS

New York Daily News Man, "Waiting to Be Produced"

Max Lief, who assists Burns Mantle, dramatic editor of the New York Daily News, is co-author of two musical comedies, both of which have been sold. The young author is now "waiting to be produced."

One of the revues called "Headlines of 1927" and sold to Fisher & Gross, independent producers, got as far as rehearsals and was to open in Newark in August when a big financial supporter walked out. Max and his brother Nathaniel Lief wrote the lyrics and book of this revue and the music was written by Ray Perkins, brother-in-law of Fulton Oursler, editor of the MacFadden publications and author of the "Spider."

Lief described the "unproduced production as a "dramatized newspaper." It opens with the "ladies of the tabloid papers" stepping out from between huge scenic column rules. Different scenes were to be changed weekly during the season to keep up with the current news.

The other play is called "Well, Well, Well" and Lief helped write the lyrics and book with Montague Glass and Jules Eckert Godman.

SHANER PROMOTED

Earl Livingstone Shaner for 11 years with the Penton publications has been appointed editor-in-chief of Iron Trade Review, Cleveland, succeeding Charles J. Stark, president of the Penton Publishing Company.

NEW DAILY STARTED IN KNOXVILLE

Evening Dispatch Begins Publication with Ralph Cate as Business Manager and W. W. O'Guin Managing Editor

The Knoxville (Tenn.) Dispatch, Knoxville's newest afternoon daily, started publication Sept. 12, with Ralph Cate business manager and W. W. O'Guin managing editor and editorial writer.

Mr. Cate was formerly business manager of the Knoxville Free Press and Mr. O'Guin was formerly editor of the old Knoxville Sentinel. O'Guin has been at various time associated with the Nashville Banner, the Nashville Tennessean, Chattanooga Times, Knoxville Sentinel and the Bristol Herald-Courier.

Harry Human is advertising manager, and Wiley B. Baker, is circulation manager.

In announcing the entry of the new journal into the Knoxville field the editor stated that the Dispatch came into being in "answer to a well-nigh universal demand for a newspaper in Knoxville in sympathy with the traditions and ideals" of the people of that section.

The Dispatch is served by the International News Service and the King Features Syndicate. It started publication as an eight-column eight-page journal.

The officers of the Dispatch Publishing Company are J. P. Roddy, president; W. W. O'Guin, vice-president, and Ralph Cate, secretary-treasurer.

THREE INVESTIGATIONS PROVE WIDE READERSHIP

THIRTY CITIES OF 10,000 TO OVER 140,000 IN 2-BILLION "BOWL"

VARIED INTERESTS ARE AVID EXAMINER FANS

SPEAKING of readership, we've been doing some interesting research work among various groups that ought to make you space-buyers sit up and take notice.

For instance, we've found that 88 out of every 100 of the financial giants that rule Los Angeles' "Wall Street," read The Los Angeles Examiner! And, on top of that, 76% of them are regular subscribers.

It doesn't take much of an analyst to tell you what that means to ALL advertisers—not only those who are floating bond issues!

More "Warm" Friends

ICE cream dealers read The Examiner, too. That means druggists and confectioners. We found that out in the course of an investigation for the Christopher Ice Cream Company. Among these gentlemen, 82 out of every 100 is the reader-figure.

That's live information for advertisers to whom it's important that the dealer be sold, as well as the ultimate consumer.

Subscribers Count Most

A MORTGAGE and trust company in Los Angeles recently asked its 100 employes what papers they read, and what papers they subscribed to. The Examiner showed 19 subscribers against the other morning paper's 13, and the nearest P. M.'s 6. One afternoon paper showed a preponderance of street sales. We mention that for what it is worth, while still pointing out that The Examiner, in Los Angeles, has the largest home-delivered circulation of ANY newspaper.

Walnuts Will Net 16 Millions

CALIFORNIA walnut growers should receive a return of approximately $16,000,000 from this year's crop, which is expected to be the largest and best quality walnut production in the state's history according to a statement from officials of the California Walnut Growers' Association.

Harvesting is expected to start late in September, and in the latter part of October and the beginning of November it will be at its height.

Glendale — City of Beauty — In The ExamineRegion!

GLENDALE, beautiful home city within Los Angeles' wide-embracing boundaries, but a self-governing community of from 55,000 to 65,000 people, is one of the many highly prosperous ExamineRegion metropoli. Some indication of how the Sunday Examiner blankets the Los Angeles department store daily-delivery radius, of which Glendale is a part, may be seen in the fact that in Glendale, for instance, are two newspapers with Glendale circulations of 8,345 and 4,166. The Sunday Examiner reaches 6,350 families in Glendale!

Velva Darling

TWO years ago she was writing for the college paper—at Stanford University. Today, International Syndicate sends her column throughout the Nation.

That's Velva Darling's rapid rise, since The Examiner in Los Angeles discovered her, as it has many others, and introduced her two-edged feature, "Sometimes I Think It Does, But Sometimes I Think It Doesn't."

Incidentally, she's the youngest woman feature writer in the country. And she does her work in a small town half-way between Los Angeles and San Francisco, in the shade of a grape-arbor.

LARGEST HOME-DELIVERED CIRCULATION OF ANY NEWSPAPER IN LOS ANGELES!

Los Angeles Examiner

L. A. COUNTY IS CALLED WEALTHIEST IN NATION

WITHIN the two-billion dollar a year, 40-mile bowl of which Los Angeles is the center, are 30 cities with a population of more than 10,000 people; twenty-one of them ranging from 10,000 to 25,000; six of them from 25,000 to 50,000, and three of them from 50,000 to almost 142,000!

Clustering around the great metropolis of Los Angeles, like gems on a diadem, and linked to her by steel and asphalt, the golden cities within The Examiner's impressive zone of influence, constitute a market without parallel in the world!

"327" Quality Average

H. G. Weaver, in an exhaustive search for the General Motors Corporation of a basic index for purchasing power by counties, found Los Angeles County, in which all but two or three of these cities are located, the richest in earning power in America. The Dartnell Advertisers' Guide for 1927, on Page 151, gives Los Angeles County's "Quality of Population," on an average basis of 100, as 327, the only county in its national listing that gets into the "300" class, at all. The next nearest county is one in Wyoming, with a quality average of 292, but with a population of only a little over 20,000.

Here's Real Coverage

And these first-quality people read The Examiner; they read it avidly! In the 30 cities mentioned, for example, every other family reads our Sunday paper, and that is a coverage not even approached by any other newspaper in this territory.

You're not really breaking into The Los Angeles market if your advertising program doesn't include the prosperous, home-owning, automobile-driving, independent communities in and around this fifth greatest American sales-spot! And ONLY ONE newspaper provides a comprehensive enough coverage to make a worthwhile impression on them: The Los Angeles Sunday Examiner!

L. A. Prosperity

LOS ANGELES enjoys greater prosperity today than any other quarter of the United States, James Stimpson, president of Marshall Field and Company, declared upon his arrival in Los Angeles recently:

"Business conditions in Los Angeles appear to be exceptionally good," he said. "The general prosperity of the nation nowhere is better visible than in Los Angeles and Southern California."

FROM THE AGENCY REVIEWING STAND AS THE "BIG PARADE" PASSES

Announcement of Newspaper Campaign The Bugle That Calls Army of "Off the List" Solicitors—And How They Try to Get On

By HAMMOND EDWARD FRANKLIN

THE new account is landed, the problem and market studied, the plan of action decided, appropriation made and the list of newspapers carefully picked to give what sound judgment indicates will be most results for least money.

The orders have been issued to the newspapers and the salesmen of the manufacturer are at work. Everything is humming briskly along. Then——

The fun begins!

Shadows darken the agency doorway. The tramp-tramp of feet grows louder. The Thundering Herds approach!

They come by ones and twos in ever-thickening numbers, they put through long-distance telephone calls and send urgent wires. For, lo, the rumor is going the rounds that the So-and-so Manufacturing Company is sending out orders for a new campaign.

Here is how one principal of a moderate-size advertising agency views the merry onslaught of newspaper representatives, salesmen and other executives, in between attempted snatches of creative work and how he classifies some types who approached him in connection with a campaign which used 82 newspapers:

ME, TOO, MIKE

"He drops in after the appropriation for his city has been closed and insists that his paper should carry the same or at least a supplementary schedule, regardless. Seldom offers any constructive reasons—just takes it for granted that because advertising is being ordered, he should get his share, whether he has the first or ninth paper in the town or whether his paper has any rightful place in the picture. Firmness causes him to leave with that sad, downcast look.

SWITCHER SAM

"Watch out—here comes Switcher Sam himself! He is pained, ah, deeply so, at the grave and unforgivable error you have committed. You have picked the wrong paper! You have selected the weak opposition sheet with 261 less paid circulation, as proven by A.B.C. statements, and 2c a line higher rate. The campaign will be ruined. It is doomed to premature death.

"But hold! It is not too late! Although your orders are issued and now in cold type at his rival's composing room, you can remedy this deplorable situation at one master stroke. Simply telegraph the rival newspaper at Switcher Sam's expense—'won't cost you a cent'—and instruct said competitor to turn cuts, copy and schedule over to his own Peerless Daily Wow, and the success of the effort, in a cloud of glory, is guaranteed before you start. 'To err is human, but to switch divine.'

"Only downright mulishness, according to Switcher Sam, prevents this method from being effective very often. His trump card is to get his publisher to write a protest letter on stationery of a local dealer. It is seldom justified.

FIGUREHOUND FELIX

"No day would be complete without this go-getter in the tortoise-shell glasses with his huge mass of figures, charts and graphs by which he can prove the moon is made of green cheese, the world will come to an end in 2054 or what have you? If you sell an article for men, his is the newspaper with the man appeal. If it's laundry soap, you may be sure Felix can prove his is the one medium to cover the feminine suds-mongers. If the product is for workingmen, his is sure to be the newspaper which is their champion and constant friend. If it's a Rolls-Royce, more of his readers pay an income tax per foot than any other publication within seven counties.

"His special hobby delight is pointing out the great gains in circulation or linage made by his paper over the rival paper and any decreases in the latter. He reels off figures until the head of the buyer of space is swirling—then the figurehound 'rep' of the other paper in the town comes in and shows figures to prove his own supremacy in the field. Early in experience, the wary agency principal has decided that figures 'ain't always what they seem,—sometimes skim milk masquerades as cream.' He forms the habit, perhaps unfortunately of discounting many statistics and facts presented by Figurehound Felix because he knows they are apt to be biased.

"A fellow like Felix often is happy if he can find some one just to listen sweetly. Whether he makes a sale doesn't matter so long as he can tell his story and get it off his chest. There are space salesmen who use graphs and figures in a highly intelligent and sound way, but the rest make it hard for the real fellows.

HANDOUT HENRY

"He's ready to give you columns of free publicity and may even chuck in the linotype machines and presses for good measure if you'll only use his newspaper. Nothing to it! Just give him a contract and he'll do the rest even to selling the merchandise. Almost too good to be true. The chap who doesn't offer too much, yet enough intelligent co-operation gets farther than this bird.

WINDJAMMER WILL

"This fellow is the greatest time-waster on record. He invites himself behind the front gate into the inner sanctum, regales himself with a pipe or cigar, even though you happen not to be keen on smoking during business hours, and leisurely regales you with gossip, chit-chat, oodles of nothingness, none applying to the problem at hand. He goes over the same ground several times and on the next call says exactly the same thing again without telling anything new. He has no regard for the needs of the advertiser, but considers only his own viewpoint.

HOG-IT-ALL HENRY

"The platform and battle cry: 'All for me; none for anyone else in my city.' According to him, his is the only newspaper in existence. Never, under any circumstances, should any space whatsoever be issued to any other local newspapers in his section. He doesn't mind not getting the account himself so long as his rivals aren't receiving anything.

ANVIL ANGUS

"You've met him. He's the boy who always carries his own newspaper and his rival's and lets you 'judge for yourself' by pointing out all the patent medicine ads, painless dentistry copy and free automobile circulation contests published by the opposition. Of course, he 'wouldn't knock for the world, but he just wanted to open your eyes to the truth.'

GLAD-HAND GUS

"Just happened to be near, so dropped in. Usually makes his approach quick and short, unless of Windjammer Type, and now and then gets some business, unless he tries to be too personal. Occasionally, if a Personality Kid, tries to dazzle you with his gold fillings.

TWO-GUN GET-EM-OR-DIE

"He comes in with blood in his eye and is likely to walk out with metaphorical blood on his nose. He's determined to get the account or bust. Almost invariably carries the scrap to the client and often tries to discredit the agency's judgment. Sometimes succeeds in undermining the manufacturer's belief in all advertising, and especially newspaper ad-advertising, by confusing him.

"Always looks for some one higher up in agency or organization to tackle. Often combines the qualities of Anvil Angus, Windjammer Will, Figurehound Felix and Switcher Sam. A fighter, but sometimes dangerous to advertising. When he wins, he does so ruthlessly.

THE 57 VARIETIES

"Then there is the chap who brings you in the name of a two-by-four account with the air of one who is about to make you rich, the fellow who does you a favor by giving you information and thereafter thinks he owns you body and soul for life, the youngster just starting as yet unequipped with anything other than shoe leather and a list of accounts (many incorrect or obsolete) and the oldster who is surprised when you don't recall him—he called on you once two years ago.

"Like all salesmen, these oncoming men have their follies and foibles. There are 57 varieties. It's some job to keep them all happy. But in their group are many remarkably capable, intelligent, tactful, broad-minded, well-posted salesmen of space. Contact with them is a constant education and smooths the relationship between advertiser, agency and publisher for the mutual good of all. The bigger caliber salesmen, who always is advancing the interests of advertising as a whole as well as his own medium, knows what to say, when and how to say it, and when to stop. He frequently is of inestimable help and he is always welcome."

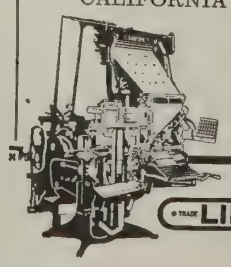
"Speedy Service"



"Permit me to congratulate you on the speedy manner in which our rush order for parts was handled by your company this week.

"The machinist whom we had engaged to overhaul our machine notified your company about a week ago to be on the lookout for a rush order. He arrived Monday and on Monday noon (January 10) put his order for 16 parts in the mail at California, 50 miles south of Pittsburgh, Pa.

"The parts ordered arrived on Thursday morning (January 13) and were on the machine in two hours.

"That is what I call speedy service and it surely is appreciated. While our shop carries more parts in stock than the average newspaper in the country, still there are times when we need parts in a hurry and I can frankly say that in ten years' dealing I have never had such speedy service, even on telegraphic orders. This speedy service on the part of your company has perhaps done more to sell me on Mergenthaler than any other argument, advanced by either your representative or the agent for another machine."

"Lumber Capital of the South"

THE largest lumber market from Maine to Texas is at Jacksonville, Florida. About 60,000 carloads or more than a billion feet of lumber pass through Port Jacksonville each year.

These shipments consist chiefly of Southern Pine, Gulf Red Cypress and Southern Hardwoods. Their total value is more than $35,000,000 annually.

Jacksonville is also the world's largest shipping point for naval stores, about ten million dollars' worth of these products being shipped from here yearly.

These basic industries account in part for Jacksonville's continued and steadily growing prosperity. No dull seasons, no dull years. Always a ready market for good products that are favorably known.

Make your products known to this market by advertising in Florida's greatest newspaper (daily and Sunday)—

Mr.G.R.Katz,
E.Katz Special Advertising Agency,
New York,N.Y.,

My dear Mr.Katz:

It hardly seems possible,but it is true,that today marks the passing of the fifth year since we entered into a contract with your organization to represent us in the national field.

For us,they have been five very pleasant years of agreeable,intelligent service on the part of your entire organization.Personally, I dont believe it would be possible for me to find an organization that would work with me any more faithfully that yours has,and it, due to the very splendid cooperation we have received from each of your offices that The Herald continues to show a healthy gain in national lineage each year.

I am hopeful that you too,have been pleased with your connection with our paper during this period.We have worked rather tirelessly in an effort to be helpful to you in the securing of national business for The Durham Herald,and we hope you have been pleased with our brand of cooperation.

Tomorrow marks the beginning of a new year of our pleasant and profitable connection with your organization,and we are hppeful that each succeeding "New Year" will find us as well pleased with your services as we are at this writing.

With sincere good wishes and kindest personal regards,we are,

Very truly yours

Statistical Rating of West Virginia Counties and Cities for Products of General Appeal, in Six Major Classes of Quality and Cost—An Original Simplified and Tested Formula from Basic Data

By NELSON H. SEUBERT

Copyright 1927 by Editor & Publisher Company. All rights are reserved and warning is given that reproduction of these results, in whole or in part, without written permission of Editor & Publisher Co., will constitute copyright infringement.

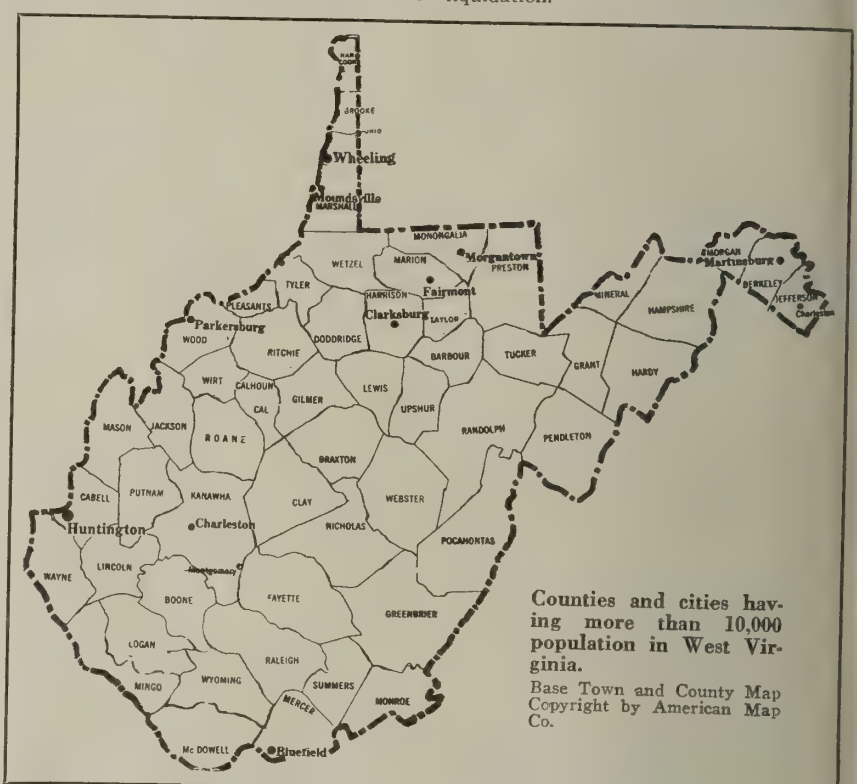
A STATE MARKET, capable of absorbing 1.3703 per cent of the national ration of necessities and .7252 per cent of the highest priced luxuries is West Virginia, analyzed as to its consumer-buying ability. This is the nineteenth article in the current EDITOR & PUBLISHER series, which will continue until statistics for every state have been presented.

The analysis printed below represents purchasing power of consumers for goods, graded in six classes, from necessities to the highest-priced luxuries. The index number represents the percentage of the buying power for the class for the community under consideration in relation to the consumer buying ability of the entire country.

The factors upon which the index is based are population and number of income-tax returns. In the sixth class, covering the most expensive luxuries, the income factor is the number of returns on incomes of more than $10,000.

The gradation of purchasing power is necessitated by the fact that while a given number of people will buy a certain quantity of necessities, irrespective of income distribution, the latter becomes increasingly important as the value of the commodity and its character as a luxury increases.

For that reason, the weights given to population and income vary in each class. In Class I, population is weighted at 90 and income at 10. In Class II, population is weighted at 70 and income at 30. In Class III, population and income are weighted 50-50. In Class IV, population is weighted at 30 and income at 70. In Class V, population is weighted at 10 and income at 90. In Class VI, the weights are the same as in Class V, and the income factor is as defined above.



The map below depicts the relative buying power of the state, its large cities and rural districts in relation to the average for the country. The excellent showing of the cities is remarkable—and an unfailing indication of the newspaper advertising as the road to quick sales.

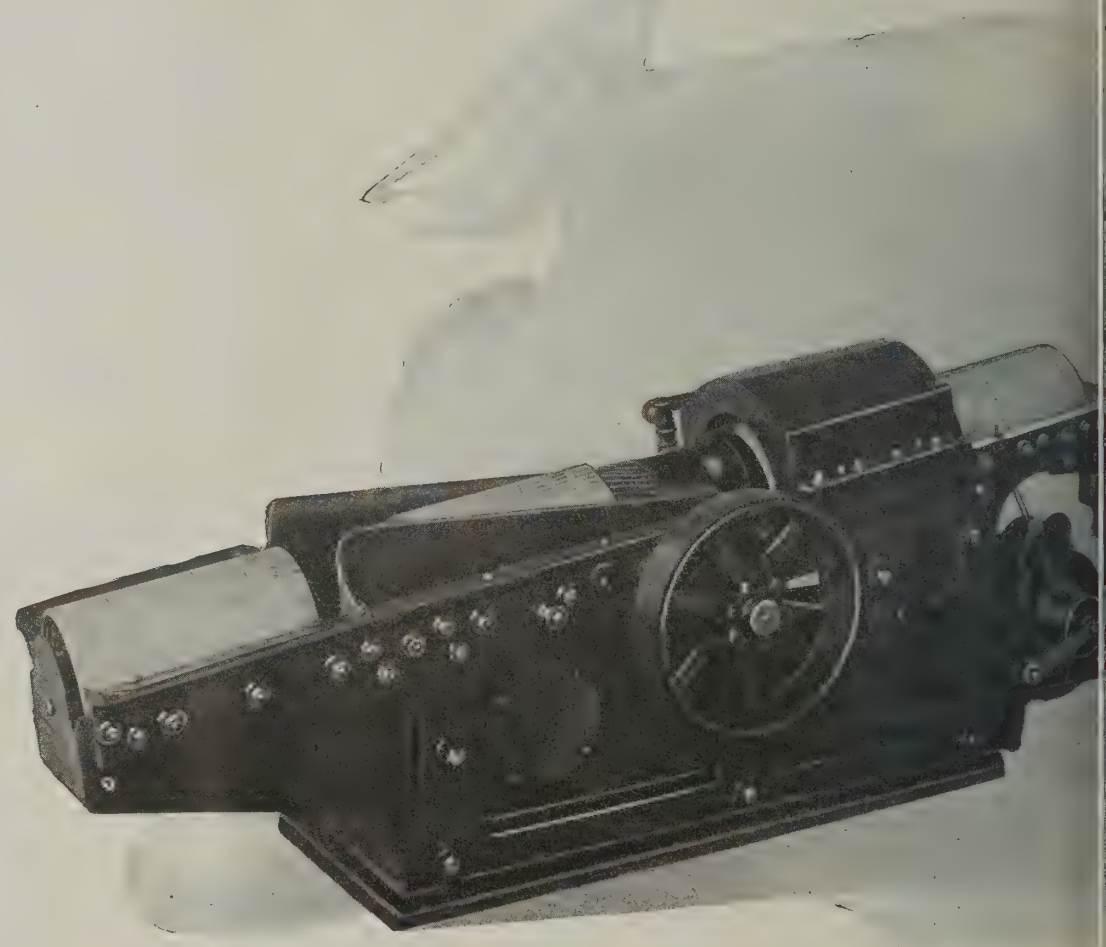
Racing Pigeons Carried News of This Story for U.P. Newspapers



NEWSPAPERS receiving United Press led their fields on the story of Mrs. Clemington Corson's attempt to swim the English channel from West to East on Sept. 6th. The picture above shows how they were enabled to do it. Wireless equipment would not work satisfactorily on the channel that day. The United Press used swift racing pigeons to carry bulletins back to Dover from the United Press launch accompanying Mrs. Corson. At the left in the above picture Sidney J. Williams, United Press staff correspondent, is writing a bulletin on tissue paper while the pigeon expert at the right attaches to the leg of one of the birds a small aluminum tube in which to carry the message. The man in the center is a swimmer, ready to plunge to Mrs. Corson's aid if necessary. The pigeons included several winners of championship races from France and Spain to England. They were capable of flying 50 to 60 miles an hour. A few minutes after being released from the launch each pigeon would arrive at the loft in Dover where Robert P. Dowson of the London United Press staff awaited the messages, holding an open telephone to London. Inset at the right is a section of the London cable desk showing how Williams' running story came in by telephone from Dowson and was immediately flashed by cable to the United States and elsewhere throughout the world. By carrier pigeon, by telephone, by cable and by telegraph the story was delivered accurately and speedily to newspapers in 37 countries served by United Press.

OFFENSIVE "HUMOR"

YEARS ago many newspaper editors made a practice of assigning humorists to cover police court hearings. It was believed to be very funny that Mr. Bambo Smith had bumped a washtub off the head of his wife Fanny, or that the town's Old Soak had been sent to the workhouse to do his 49th "bit." We recall such columns that regularly appeared in certain newspapers, sometimes illustrated with comic drawings of the unfortunate subjects. That this is no longer done is evidence of an improved sense of humor, not to say decency.

Some of our ablest columnists in this day believe they are justified in picking up from newspapers, usually competitors or country sheets, items which are humorous by reason of some combination of names or facts or because of clumsy construction. There is no objection, of course, when the effect is to expose the writer as a bungler or the paper as poorly edited, but frequently such items reflect discredit on persons and must bring blushes to innocent cheeks. We seriously question whether some are not actionable as having held persons up to scorn and ridicule. Take an item such as this, for instance:

HAZEL NUTTING'S SECOND CHOICE

From Yanktown (N. J.) Bugle.

Standing in a rose bower Miss Hazel Powers on Thursday became the bride of Harry Nutting at her home in Fairview. T. R. Jones was best man.

Sitting in a subway train this item strikes one as funny. We read it and laugh. But it is not humorous to Harry Nutting, his wife or their friends. Their wedding has been made a public joke. The bungling fool who wrote the item for the Bugle is not touched by the publication of it in a column of humor. Following is another type of "humor" that is, we believe, close to the libel line. Certainly the newspaper is responsible for the suggestive headline over a legitimate item.

CHAMPION HOME WALKER

Miss Ethel Hawley was awarded a silver cup by the Girls' Club of the M. E. church this week for being the best girl hiker in town. She made a record this week by walking 18 miles from Silver Lake in three hours flat.

Is this a thin-skinned view? The edge of humor is not keen when the joke is at the expense of an innocent person. Would you enjoy having a newspaper hold your young daughter or sister up before the vulgarians of the community as the "champion home walker?" Would the headline be funny if it concerned a member of your family circle? Our choice of offensive paragraphs is not extreme. We have seen in metropolitan newspapers items of this character which were so cruel that we have wondered how they passed the desk or escaped legal action.

Hats off to the men who have debunked the Chicago fight ballyhoo in free space. They have given the public stories that were both interesting and valuable.

POSTAGE STAMP HONORS

FOR the second time in the history of postage stamps, according to London Newspaper World, a newspaper man has been honored by having his portrait the subject of the engraving. The first instance, it is stated, was when Bulgaria paid tribute to the memory of James David Bourchier, the famous London Times Balkan correspondent. The new stamp, of five-cent denomination, has been issued by the Canadian government in honor of T. D'Arcy McGee, gifted Irish journalist and orator.

The Newspaper World is, of course, mistaken in its statement that these men were the only journalists ever to be so honored. The face of Ben Franklin has been engraved on a postage stamp in the United States. Warren G. Harding's portrait is on stamps that are even now in circulation, though it may be said that he was honored as a president rather than as a journalist.

BLUNDERS AT DAYTON

BLIND anger, which has no place in business, is the root of the evil situation that has developed at Dayton between advertising merchants and the newspapers. The hot-headed slogan, "You can't tell me how to run my business," seems to be on the banners of both of the contenders in this astounding controversy. If the merchants and the newspapers will raise their eyes from the petty issues, abandon reckless arbitrary conduct and get down to reason they will find that some principles are involved which concern not only civic responsibility but the honor of the newspaper profession and the profit of the advertising and selling industry.

We think the merchants are mistaken in establishing a "shopping news" sheet, for many reasons, but we do not deny the right of any advertiser to spend his money as he will. The legal right of a newspaper to decline advertising, unless there is a contractual obligation to the contrary, is unquestionable, but we do not believe that it is good policy, fair or prudent for a newspaper to refuse to yield advertising advantages to a merchant merely because he is encouraging a rival medium. In the case of a "shopping news" this is very flattering indeed to a medium that has been a failing experiment in many cities and probably would not last long in Dayton. Then to get hot-headed over the matter and go into a wholesale reciprocal boycotting game to us seems the height of folly, very sure to be regretted.

What is the pivotal fact in this case? Both the merchants and the newspapers have as their first duty the up-building of their city. It must be recognized there, as elsewhere in the United States, that the newspaper is the general center of the community, social, political, economic and broadly in every other sense. If what the merchants of Dayton do tends to destroy the prosperity of the newspapers, depriving them of natural revenue or in any way limiting their independent action or efficiency, it is surely as plain as a pikestaff that the merchants are acting against the general interest. No "shopping news" will ever make Dayton prosperous or famous! Efficient newspapers, made economically independent by the fair support of the trading community, are the greatest single factor in the upbuilding of any city. The Dayton newspaper managements are evidently of the opinion that the purpose of the merchants was to set up an instrument calculated to limit the action of the local press by depriving it of some of its revenue, or restricting this year's revenue to that of last year, or giving the merchants a weapon by which they might control rates and other conditions. Naturally, they resent this and are well within their rights in opposing the new venture by all reasonable means. If there is a local ordinance against the circulation of handbills which applies to the distribution of a free advertising sheet the newspapers are right in invoking it against the shopping news. But the question might be tested out in the courts before the newsapers hold the merchants up to ridicule and scorn as wilful lawbreakers.

When good sense returns to Dayton the merchants and the newspapers will recognize and act on the fact that each is absolutely dependent upon the other for progress through the years, that nothing is gained by angry dispute but that new heights may be conquered by intelligent and harmonious co-operation. A little less talk about "my rights" and a little more appreciative thought of the other fellow's responsibilities to his institution and to the community at large would be helpful.

BIG NAMES

THERE is a school in editing which holds that nothing is worth while which does not carry a "big name." No matter what the subject may be if the signature is well-known the stuff must be rushed into print. Perhaps it is a ghost writer's product and the great name has been signed without so much as a reading—still the stuff must be good. We ask, do big names justify the publication of little thoughts? Does the reader find satisfaction in a poor story signed or unsigned? We do not think so.

A certain Eastern newspaper occupied our attention on a recent rainy Sunday morning. Its feature sections were attractive, even flashy and seemed to carry a wealth of good stuff. The names and portraits of a dozen or more men and women famous the world over for leadership stood out on the pages. The headines were compelling. Eagerly we dug into the matter. There were a couple of stories that might have been written by the persons who signed them but we would wager that the bulk of the stuff was written by hack secretaries or publicity agents, or were worked over from moth-eaten, after-dinner speeches. In one instance the headline was wholly unjustified. By and large the stuff was the sheerest literary hash, which no editor would think of printing because of any information or important thought revealed. Out of the mess, only two stories to us seemed even genuine. We do not doubt that the matter was bought and paid for, some at fancy figures.

If one is seeking information, inspiration or an entertaining hour from a printed page, he wants it in the body of the stuff. Nothing is more disappointing than a hollow promise in headlines and pictures. The chief of one of America's largest industrial institutions on a recent occasion in New York told the editors of trade and class publications that he subscribed for papers in his field to get information and he violently objected to cheap stuff put up under the names of great men by ghost writers, merely to keep those names in the public eye. He didn't propose to have his good time wasted. He didn't think that the presidents of corporations were necessarily as well informed regarding trade matters as were men at the bench, or on the firing line of distribution and sales. The latter were the boys who were making the discoveries. He wanted to hear from them, since they had something to say. Golly, how he roasted the lime lighters, flatterers, and literary sycophants!

The principle, in general, holds true with the average reader of newspapers. Dull stuff is uninteresting, no matter by whom signed. But the bright idea, the novel thought, the gay and festive new human experience is good stuff in print, whether signed by Bill Smith or the latest star potentate.

No man can edit a newspaper who does not know, through long and patient study, or through instinct of the genius, what the people of his community are in the mass.

SUN AS CICERONE

NOTHING is more interesting to the average newspaper reader than facts about the home town, its people and institutions. New York Sun recently made a hit with a feature which ran from day to day under the title "Facts about New York." We do not know who wrote the stuff, but he is a thorough reporter and is well acquainted with the interesting features of the metropolis and must have made a careful study of historical data. Broadway, Fifth Avenue, the Bowery, the Great White Way, the numerous villages and centers, public institutions, important private institutions, the tractions, parks, streets and so forth each received separate treatment in an article that may be read in from two to five minutes. Each is an excellent story. So great was the demand for back copies of the paper that the management has now issued an attractive booklet which is receiving wide distribution. We note that the feature is being run in London newspapers to satisfy the interest of Englishmen who wonder what America is like. The stunt is by no means new, but the Sun's application of it is novel and it is a suggestion for any editor who is wondering how to satisfy the hunger of his readers for local interest.

PERSONAL

MR. and Mrs. Cyrus H. K. Curtis aboard their yacht Lyndonia, left Portland for New York and Philadelphia recently. They spent the summer in Maine waters.

Grove Patterson, editor of the Toledo (O.) Blade, was re-elected vice-president of the Laymen's Association of the Western Ohio conference of the Methodist Episcopal church at its recent meeting in Delaware, O.

FOLKS WORTH KNOWING

FROM carrier boy to publisher—no, not the title of an Horatio Alger story but the Alpha and the Omega of Frank D. Throop's newspaper career to date.

FRANK D. THROOP

Mr. Throop, now publisher of the Davenport (Ia.) Democrat, made his way to the top by the stepping stones of printers' devil, typesetter, linotype operator, reporter, city editor, managing editor and business manager with a little advertising soliciting thrown in for good measure.

He comes from a family of newspaper men, his grandfather having founded the Mount Pleasant (Ia.) Free Press and his father having been manager and part owner of the Mount Pleasant News. Mr. Throop, born at Mount Pleasant in 1878, began carrying papers when a small lad. Later he entered his father's shop to learn the printer's trade.

Using his knowledge of printing to help him through college he became advertising manager of the school weekly and in 1899 was graduated from Iowa Wesleyan with a B. A. degree.

His editorial work was started on the Muscatine (Ia.) Journal of which he was made city editor in 1901. Four years later he became managing editor and in 1907 took the publisher's chair. Here he was associated with A. W. Lee, founder of the syndicate bearing his name.

In 1915 Mr. Throop bought stock in the Davenport Democrat, becoming its publisher and general manager.

I can describe
A rose in bloom,
But who can catch the rhythm
Of the city room?

The restless, broken,
Raucous rush;
The quick word spoken,
The sudden hush;

The puny men
With cocky eyes,
Conquering;
Cracking wise.

"Somebody answer
The Trenton wire."
"Copy—boy!"
"Take this fire."

"Rip it out,
We're on the line."
"How many dead?
Twenty? Fine."

Jingle—clatter—
The wires drone
The ancient anguish
Of flesh and bone;

The ancient story of
Iron and ice,
Gold and glory
And sacrifice.

I can tell
Of a street at gloom,
But who can catch the rhythm
Of the city room?

Salada Tea Company Has "Newspaper Day" in New Home—Merchandising Campaign for Calfskin Tanners—Capt. P. K. Crocker With Shadex

ABOUT 50 newspaper men attended "newspaper day" held by the Salada Tea Company last week when the company's new hame was formally opened at Berkely and Stuart streets, Boston. Hon. P. C. Larkin, president of the company, presided at a buffet luncheon. Salada is advertised exclusively in the newspapers. Among the newspaper men attending were A. H. Marchant, business manager, Boston (Mass.) Post; E. H. Preston, Boston Herald and Traveler; Stanley Pratt and Chalmers Pancoast, New York Times; and Herald Jackson, Chicago Tribune.

Arrangements have just been completed whereby the Calfskin Tanners will immediately inaugurate an educational merchandising campaign stressing the merit of grain finish calf leather, according to an announcement made by F. X. Wholley, of the Barnet Leather Company, and J. C. Lilly, of the American Hide & Leather Company, Inc. Messrs. Wholley and Lilly were appointed a committee of two by the tanners at a conference in Buffalo last month to decide, ways and means for carrying forward such a campaign. The committee has appointed the Byron G. Moon Company., Inc., of New York City and Troy, to make necessary surveys.

Capt. P. K. Crocker, formerly sales and advertising manager, of John Schoonmaker & Son, Newburgh, N. Y., has been named research director of the Shadex Company, of Springfield, Mass., makers of the Shadex patented fiber fabric window shade.

Capt. Crocker was at one time with the New York Sun, and with Lord & Taylor, New York, as assistant advertising manager.

Charles W. Myers, director of trade relations, Armour & Co., Chicago, has just resigned to become vice-president of the Ko-Pa Corporation, Chicago and Fort Worth, Tex., manufacturers of cereal food products. Mr. Myers is chairman of the Speakers Bureau of the International Advertising Association, and also a member of the Educational Bureau Committee.

Newspapers throughout northern New York state are swelling their local advertising linage by means of a new series of advertisements sent out by the General Electric Company from Schenectady, N. Y. The G. E. is taking quarter-page space to advertise a new house wiring system, and the newspapers are lining up local electrical stores that have been named as agencies. Some papers have built up as many as two pages of advertising. The majority have obtained one page.

A bathroom on wheels is making a tour of northern New York cities as part of an advertising campaign of the Crane Company, bathroom fixture manufacturers. One-day stands are being made in each city by a large truck, the interior of which is completely fitted as a bathroom. Public inspection is invited.

Coolidge Advertising Company, Des Moines, Ia., is handling the Iowa state campaign of Iowa druggists in association with the advertising committee of the Iowa Pharmaceutical Association, using dailies, weeklies and farm journals in the state. A three-year campaign has been mapped, said to be the largest undertaken by a similar association within the boundaries of a state. George Jay Shenandoah is chairman of the advertising committee of the association conducting the campaign. Copy the first of which appeared last week will illustrate the services of the modern drug store and will be general in its character.

Plans for a $4,000,000 national advertising campaign, in behalf of the nation's shoe industry, will be discussed at a meeting of the New York State Shoe Retailers association to be held Oct. 4 and 5 in Niagara Falls. A. H. Geuting, president of the National Shoe Retailers association, will attend the convention and outline the proposed campaign plan.

The Glycerine Producers' Association, whose membership is open to all glycerine refiners and now comprises the principal manufacturers of radiator glycerine in the country, has adopted a seal which will be used to identify to motorists all the brands of this new and increasingly used anti-freeze which conform to the standards set by the association, according to Roscoe C. Edmund, general manager.

Reed G. Landis Company of Chicago, formerly Arnold Joerns Company, has been appointed advertising counsel for Greater Market Development, Automotive Equipment Association.

The Campbell Soup Company has announced plans to double the facilities of its plant at Camden, N. J., by the construction of a new group of buildings to cost several million dollars. A. C. Dorrance is general manager.

Virginia is going to spend $50,000 on advertising and Cecil, Warwick & Cecil, Richmond advertising agency, has been appointed to place the business.

VANDALS WRECK PLANT

Ft. Myers (Fla.) Palm Leaf Prints in Another City

High powered cars, under heavy guard, filled with the editorial staff and "back room" men of the Fort Myers (Fla.) Morning Palm Leaf sped through the night Sept. 10 seeking a newspaper plant that would print even the smallest of "sheets" so that the Palm Leaf would not be compelled to miss an issue. The cars were loaded down with equipment and men, and after being 'turned down" by all the editor's and publishers in Lee County because of the hot political fight which the Palm Leaf was waging against the "city hall ring" in Fort Myers, the cars drew up in front of the Hendry County News, a small weekly shop in La Belle, Florida.

Riding with the publisher and editor Capt. Jack De Lysle of the Palm Leaf was Roy E. Larson chief deputy of Lee County. When the editors' green Packard steamed down the main street of the village of La Belle, they found the chief of police of that community on guard at the door of the little country town plant.

The Fort Myers men were soon at work and the "country Campbell" ground out 3,000 papers telling its readers that vandals had entered the Palm Leaf plant and demolished presses and type-setting machines in an attempt to silence the paper.

The morning Palm Leaf had just announced the start of a new afternoon paper and a Sunday paper. The Palm Leaf in May started a campaign against the "gang" at the city hall, and in the course of three months caused Mayor H. E. Parnell, and one commissioner A. E. Raymond to resign, also the city engineer "Kid" Stanley, the city clerk F. E. Smith, the superintendent of the sanitary department, a Mr. Jaeger, and fire chief Corley Bryant.

The Palm Leaf is publishing an evening, morning and Sunday paper.

Talking in Terms that Dealers Value

WHEN a salesman calls on any Indianapolis retailer, explains the merits of his product, and then shows a portfolio of advertising definitely scheduled to appear in The INDIANAPOLIS NEWS, he is talking in terms that the dealer understands and values.

The day has passed when a salesman can talk glibly and vaguely about "our advertising program." The dealer wants to know what kind of advertising—where it will appear—how long it will continue.

To the dealer, a definite advertising campaign scheduled in The NEWS means: (1) that the product is meritorious or The NEWS would have rejected it; (2) that the usual prompt response from NEWS advertising justifies an initial order.

WOMEN IN ADVERTISING AND JOURNALISM

California Newspaper Woman Has First Novel Published—Ethel Hays Signs New Long-Time Contract with NEA—Chicago Advertising Women Hold First Meet

OUT of the west about a year ago, with her goal set for New York, came a newspaper woman, Lola Jean Simpson, for several years editor of the Berkeley (Cal.) Times. In the comparatively short period that she has been in New York, Miss Simpson has made steady progress. She has managed to write a first novel, lecture at the New School for Social Research, contribute to the Century Magazine, and other publications in the East, in addition to serving as editor of Children, the Magazine for Parents.

LOLA J. SIMPSON

"Backfire" is the title of her novel, which Macmillan will publish on Sept. 27. Because Miss Simpson, who is a descendant of one of the pioneer families of California, knows the Sacramento Valley so thoroughly, she has selected it as the locale for her story. Her grandfather named the town in which the scenes of the story are laid, and she herself was born and reared there.

Following her editorship of the Berkeley Times, Miss Simpson became editor of The Spokesman, the magazine of the Extension Division of the University of California, and also a contributing editor of The California Monthly.

Not until she entered newspaper work, however, had she written for publication. "It was splendid training," she said in a recent interview. Just now Miss Simpson is at work on her second novel.

The New York Newspaper Women's Club gave its first dinner of the season on Sept. 16 in honor of Mrs. Louella Parsons, motion picture editor of the New York American, and Miss Nellie Revell, who recently arrived in town from Hollywood. Mrs. Parsons was spending a short vacation here preliminary to covering the fight in Chicago.

The club celebrated also the weddings of three of its members during the summer. These were Miss Jane Dixon, of the New York Telegram, former president of the club, who was married to Capt. W. W. Wells, U. S. A.; Miss Charlotte McLevidge of the Chicago Daily News, who was married to Harry Payne; and Mrs. Ninetta Dayton of the Hudson Observer, who was married to John Joseph McGovern, clerk of Hudson County. Mrs. Payne will sail for Lima, Peru, within a few days, where her husband is connected with American mining interests. Captain and Mrs. Wells spent the summer abroad, but Miss Dixon has now returned to her desk on Dey Street.

A fourth member of the club Miss Ruth Raphael of Harper Brothers was married to David McCord, newspaper man and novelist.

Four members of the club have been on the Pacific Coast for their vacations; Mrs. Josephine Ober, of the World, first vice-president of the club; Miss Martha Coman, treasurer; Miss Elsie McCormick; Miss Marjorie Shuler of the Christian Science Monitor; two were in Europe, combining vacation with writing—Miss Mary Margaret McBride, and Miss Betty Ross.

Mrs. Marshall Darrach won the prize for longest and most eventful travels, having spent four months in China during last spring's uprising.

The Women's Advertising Club of Chicago opened its fall season with a meeting Sept. 20. Miss Mary Anderson, editor of the Drake-a-Day of the Drake Hotel, and president of the club, has gone to Europe, and presiding in her place was Miss Lois Donaldson, the first vice-president. Miss Cora C. Smith, advertising manager of the Strom Bearings Company, second vice-president, has taken over Miss Donaldson's duties, and Mrs. Marie K. Brown of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad has been moved up from historian to the second vice-presidency.

H. Sumner Steinberg has resigned as advertising counsel for Russek's, a New York store. James E. Wallen will succeed Mr. Steinberg and will do some special work on the account as well.

Miss Phyllis Beveridge, who started with the Blackman Company and then later went to Bamberger's and the L. S. Plaut Company of Newark, has been promoted from stylist to advertising manager.

Miss Gladys Williams, who signs "Sally" to her art work, will take over the position of stylist. Miss Williams is returned to a position that she held for over a year before she joined the forces of Worth.

Miss Dixie Tighe, daughter of Matthew F. Tighe, the late dean of Washington correspondents, has joined the staff of the King Features Syndicate. Miss Tighe has recently been writing feature articles for the Washington Herald and the Philadelphia Daily News.

Margrete Donnelly Daney, feature writer on the Toledo (O.) Blade, has returned from an automobile trip through southern Canada.

Miss Fannie Fitzwater, the New York Herald Tribune's fashion artist, who sends her drawing each week from Paris, is in New York on vacation.

Miss Esta Murrie has been appointed librarian of the Harrisburg (Pa.) Telegraph. She is a graduate of the Pulitzer School of Journalism of New York and has traveled extensively in America and Europe.

Miss Nell Snead, editor of the woman's page, Kansas City Star, one of seven passengers who crashed in an airplane 15 miles south of Boulogne, France, while en route to London, Sept. 3, returned to New York, Sept. 17 from Europe to tell of her experiences.

"Luncheon was being served," she said. "Suddenly some one of us noticed that one of the wings of the airplane was covered with some sort of mist, obviously vaporized gasoline. The pilot came into the dining compartment at the wing. He went back to the steering compartment and his assistant hurried in, looked, and went back.

"The plane began to wobble. We could sense that we were dropping. The steward came in from forward and threw down both hands as a signal that we were going to fall.

"None of us stirred. Nobody made a remark of any sort. Neither of the women, I may say, screamed. We just waited. To me it seemed that we did not wait long. I did not feel any crash or feel anything."

Her next recollection, she said, "was hearing someone say. 'Get these women out of here. This is going to burst into flames any minute.' Then the voice said, 'This one is dead'—meaning myself."

Miss Snead said she was far from dead, having suffered but a wrenched shoulder and scratches, but that she certainly would have been dead within a few minutes save for the heroic efforts of the crew and her fellow passengers who succeeded in freeing her from the wreckage just before the plane burst into flames.

ADVERTISING AGENCY AFFAIRS

C. C. Winningham Appoints Stoneglass and Hawley—Rule-Williams Advertising Agency Organzied in Worcester—Hoyt Transfers Pattillo from Boston to New York

C. C. WINNINGHAM, president of C. C. Winningham, Inc., advertising agency, Detroit, has announced the appointments of Dan Marcy Stoneglass, to the copy division, and Howard H. Hawley, to the research staff.

Mr. Stoneglass entered advertising through the editorial "end," leaving his editorship of the American Book Company, New York, to become assistant advertising director of that organization. He left the Book Company to join the staff of the E. H. Clarke advertising agency, New York, remaining there for four years before taking up an appointment with Proctor and Collier, Cincinnati, his most recent connection.

Mr. Hawley was formerly in charge of the statistical department of the Babson Institute. He has recently done work for the Detroit Chamber of Commerce and Detroit Business firms.

Otis Carl Williams, formerly national advertising manager for the Worcester (Mass.) Telegram-Gazette, and Edgar W. Rule, at one time advertising manager of the C. T. Sherer Company of Worcester, have organized the Rule-Williams Advertising Agency of Worcester.

Mr. Wiliams has been for seven years with the Telegram-Gazette, at one time holding the post of assistant business manager. Besides handling national advertising for the paper, he has had charge of promotion and the merchandising service bureau of the paper.

Thomas J. Mills succeeds Williams as national advertising manager for the Telegram-Gazette. John N. Carr will handle promotion work and the Sunday travel page.

Gilbert S. Pattillo, secretary of the Charles W. Hoyt Company, has been transferred from Boston to the New York office to serve various New England accounts with which he has been working.

The Cramer-Krasselt Company has moved its western office from 1201 Bank of Italy Building, Los Angeles, to 727 W. 7th street, the Roosevelt Building.

Olson and Enzinger, Inc., Milwaukee advertising agency, has issued in pamphlet form a series of promotion advertisements which have appeared in local newspapers and trade publications.

The election of E. F. Kennedy as vice-president of Martin-Gessner Advertising, Inc., New Orleans, La., was announced this week by Alan R. Martin, president of the company. For the past several years Mr. Kennedy has been in the bond business, both on the Pacific Coast and in New Orleans. Most recently he has represented the National City Company in Southern territory, from which position he has just resigned to assume his new duties. Martin-Gesner Advertising, Incorporated has recently moved to its new offices in the Canal Bank Building.

Louis W. Larsen, for eight years a member of the production department of Stevens and Wallis, Inc., Salt Lake City, will head a new agency with offices in the McIntyre Building, that city, to be called Ad-Craftsmen.

J. H. E. Ellis has been elected vice-president in charge of copy of the William H. Rankin Advertising Agency to succeed the late Wilbur D. Nesbit, who died suddenly about a month ago. William S. Norburg, who has been a director of the company, also becomes a vice-president, in charge of contact, assuming other duties that were in Mr. Nesbit's charge.

Herman A. Groh, first vice-president, will be in charge of the Chicago office. He has been with the company since it was founded in 1900. Mr. Ellis has been with the Rankin agency for ten years and Mr. Norburg joined the company the same week that Mr. Nesbit did, in 1908.

John J. Cahill, for many years head of the advertising firm bearing his own name, has joined the staff of Smith & Ferris, Los Angeles advertising agency, as head of the merchandising plan department.

Prather-Allen Company, of Cincinnati, O., has opened an office at 35 East Wacker Drive, Chicago, with Joseph B. Duncan in charge. Mr. Duncan was recently associated with Kling-Gibson Company.

WHAT'S WHAT IN THE FEATURE FIELD

Waite Hoyt to Write for United Features Synidcate; and He Employs No Ghost—New Yorker to Operate Its Own Syndicate—New Popular Psychology Feature

WAITE HOYT, star Yankee pitcher, will cover the World series for the United Feature Syndicate and Howard Wheeler, syndicate manager, announced this week that the ball player writes his own stuff and employs no ghost.

Hoyt, Mr. Wheeler pointed out, has been broadcasting from station WEAF in recent weeks, and on these occasions has written his own speeches.

"Hoyt really has ambitions to become a baseball writer," Mr. Wheeler said.

For the World Series service, Hoyt will write a forcast before the start of the first game, cover all games, and write a review of the series when they end.

The New Yorker witty weekly of Manhattan published to startle the "old ladies from Dubuque, Ia.," has decided to enter the syndicate field.

The idea was sold to R. H. Fleischmann owner, and Harold Ross, editor, by Marion Weaver, recently of the advertising staff of the New York Times. She is the editor and manager of the service which will operate under the name of the New Yorker Feature Service.

Miss Weaver declared that the syndicate would sell chiefly to rotogravure sections of newspapers, which she hoped to interest in editorial and cartoon features as well as pictures, and to weekly magazines of local interest similar to the New Yorker.

Among the regular departments of the magazine which will be syndicated are: "Going on About Town," "Profiles"; "Of All Things," by H. W. Brubaker; and "A Reporter at Large," by Morris Markey.

Why do we do what we do?" a new daily feature on popular psychology written by Dr. Mehran K. Thomson, professor of psychology of Michigan, will be offered newspapers shortly by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate, Harold Matson, managing editor, announced this week.

W. J. Voss, associate editor of the Ullman Feature Service, Washington, D. C., has returned from a business trip which took him as far as southern Texas. Miss Madeleine Dauphin, of the same service is back at her desk following a combined business and pleasure trip to Paris and other French cities.

Maj. Frank W. Cavanaugh, head football coach of Fordham has just signed to write three articles a week for newspapers through King Features Syndicate of New York City. Robert C. Zuppke, head football coach at Illinois, will also write for King Features.

Royal H. Roussel, for the past two years assistant city editor, San Antonio Evening News, has been named news editor of the Universal Trade Press Syndicate.

W. W. Williams, Paul Fung, and S. S. Paquin, all of King Features Syndicate, will spend a vacation soon at Croasdale Manor, Delaware Water Gap.

Chic Young, who draws "Dumb Dora," and Ed Verlier of "Little Annie Rooney" fame, have returned to New York City after a summer at their mountain studio, Greenwood Lake.

Miss Florence Ross, manuscript editor of Newspaper Feature Service, sailed for Paris on board the Rochambeau, Sept. 16

Eugene Schaffer, winner of the Franco-American scholarship and a frequent contributor of cross-word puzzles to King Features Syndicate, sailed on the Ile de France, Sept. 10.

Ask the Canadian Pacific about Canada — CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

Bureau of Canadian Information

The Canadian Pacific Railway, through its Bureau of Canadian Information, will furnish you with the latest reliable information on every phase of industrial and agricultural development in Canada. In our Reference Library at Montreal is complete data on natural resources, climate, labor, transportation, business openings, etc. Additional data is constantly being added.

DEVELOPMENT BRANCH

If you are interested in the mining wealth and industry of Canada or in the development or supply of industrial raw materials available from resources along the Canadian Pacific Railway, you are invited to consult this Branch. An expert staff is maintained to investigate information relative to these resources and examine deposits in the field. Practical information is available as to special opportunties for development, use of by-products and markets, industrial crops, prospecting and mining.

"Ask the Canadian Pacific about Canada" is not a mere advertising slogan. It is an intimation of service—without charge or obligation—that the information is available and will be promptly forthcoming to those who desire it.

Gentlemen:

In going over our records we find that this fall your firm will have been representing the Charleston, W. Va., Gazette for fifteen years, and this letter is to express to you our appreciation for the very prominent part that you have played in the growth of the Gazette from a paper fifteen years ago with circulation of under 3,000 and rate of 10¢ per inch to our present position as the largest newspaper in West Virginia with a daily paid A. B. C. circulation of over 21,500 and more than 27,500 Sunday.

The Gazette for a number of years has carried more national advertising than any paper in West Virginia and we could not let this fifteenth anniversary of the date when you became our national advertising representative pass without writing to express our appreciation of the very splendid services rendered during all those years.

Very truly yours,

THE DAILY GAZETTE COMPANY

CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING

Have You a Photographer on Your Advertising Staff?—Camera Does Good Duty for the Rochester Journal and American—Used Car and Real Estate Ads Increased

ANY advertising staff can use the services of a photographer advantageously, in the opinion of Erwin J. W. Huber, advertising director of the Rochester (N. Y.) Journal and American.

In two recent months, Mr. Huber said he was able to obtain more extra business through the use of photographs than obtained over the same period of time through the work of his staff artist.

"Pictorial For Sale Ads"

"I have an arrangement with a free lance photographer whereby he furnishes me with an eight by ten print on good, glossy paper. It is splendid for reproduction purposes. The cost is $1 each. This price includes everything, plate, transportation, time, etc.

"Not long ago we tried a new stunt with the use of photographs. The thought occurred to me that automobile dealers who are burdened with an unusual number of used cars would be interested in a new method of advertising them.

"We therefore sent out our photographer to a dozen of the larger dealers with instructions to obtain photographs of their best used car bargains. We found in some cases that these dealers would have large, expensive-looking cars at ridiculously low prices.

"We believe that prospective buyers of used cars become dizzy after wading through two and three pages of solid classified advertising that mentions hundreds of different cars. By using photographs they can better visualize the individual bargains offered, and because the minimum size cuts used will be two columns, a page will contain comparatively few of them.

"Last fall we carried approximately 3,000 lines of extra advertising obtained from the better gas service stations. In obtaining this business we also used a photographer, and although these gas stations seldom buy newspaper advertising space, we found it was easy to play on their pride by showing them a pretty picture of their station and using that picture in their advertisement.

"We obtained additional linage for our real estate classification by running each Sunday a feature called 'Pictorial for Sale Ads,'" Mr. Huber continued.

"For this business we used inexpensive junior salesmen. In making solicitations, they carried with them small kodaks and the ads were sold on the basis of a flat charge that included the cost of photograph and cut.

"The taking of the pictures meant very little extra expense. The cuts were made in groups so that our average cost per cut was something like 65 cents. Many of the cuts we had used three and four times, so that by charging a little more than our card rate, the plus rate more than covered the expense.

"We had a circular reprinted from one of these Sunday pages and mailed it out to home owners that use classified advertisements. In many cases they would order an insertion of the house they had for sale by telephone."

Reporter to Take Parachute Jump as Promotion Stunt—Cleveland Press Offers Scholarship—Archibald Resigns from St. Paul Dispatch

EDWARD CHURCHELL, reporter of the New York Evening Graphic, will try a parachute jump from an airplace Oct. 2, as a promotion stunt for his newspaper.

The Graphic is giving away lots in Bergen Manor, N. J., as prizes in a recent contest. Churchell is going to drop from the sky to pick coupons from a barrel.

The Cleveland Press is offering a free $105 scholarship in the Advertising School of the Cleveland Advertising Club. In a one-day contest open to all except Press employes, the club seeks the contestant's opinion of a "good advertisement."

The contest was based on advertisements printed in the Press, Friday, Sept. 22. Letters were limited to 200 words, the contestants enclosing with their letter the ad selected.

An outing sponsored by the New York Evening Journal was conducted Sunday, Sept. 18, for newsboys of Newburgh and Kingston, N. Y., by the Feldman Distributing Company and the Kingston News Service. The affair, attended by about 75 boys, was at the Golden Rule Inn, near Kingston. Newburgh boys won the honors in competitive sports.

John L. Dexter, for 30 years active in the Detroit, Mich., Newsboys' association and president of the organization for several years, addressed the newsboys of the New Bedford (Mass.) Standard-Mercury on Sept. 13, telling them of the work of the Detroit group. B. E. Howland, circulation manager of the Standard-Mercury, also spoke.

Frank S. Archibald, for the past four years assistant circulation director, St. Paul Dispatch and Pioneer Press and previously circulation director of The Farmer and The Farmer's Wife, has resigned to do special promotion work on Farm Journal, Philadelphia. At present he is recovering from an operation at the Mayo Hospital, Rochester, Minn.

The Richmond (Va.) News-Leader will give a free course of music lessons to the children of Richmond. The course, consisting of twelve lessons, will be published in weekly installments beginning Sept. 26.

A FORWARD STEP IN THE TECHNIQUE of TYPE METALS

RESTORE PLAN

FOR many years the manufacture of type metals was a "rule of thumb" procedure,—a condition akin to the original methods of making steel. In the steel industry it was Carnegie who was first to engage a chemist to place his plant under technical control. In the Type Metal field Merchant & Evans Company lead the field in chemical research and attempt to standardize scientifically correct formulas.

In the past, the manufacturers of type metal had a general knowledge of formulas; but the product of that day frequently caused casting troubles, or defective plates—even though the metal was being used for the firts time.

Then came the era of technical control for the type metal industry, with a definite field for the Metallurgist. The impurities that caused much of the trouble in the past were identified and eliminated; processes corrected and standardized with the result that a type metal was produced that could be used without casting difficulties.

But the work of the Metallurgist had only begun, for it was not enough to turn out a satisfactory type metal. The next step was to prolong the working life of the metal when in use. Merchant & Evans Company, one of the pioneer manufacturers of type metals, were in a particularly fortunate position for the carrying on of this important work. Among the clients of this company is the largest newspaper printing plant in the world. Through handling this large account a vast amount of data was constantly available on the question of day-to-day deterioration.

From this close contact with the world's largest user of type metals grew the Restore Metal Plan.

Today the Plan is available to all type metal users,—large or small. With the Restore Plan machine and stereotype difficulties are automatically eliminated and the life of type metal is prolonged indefinitely.

"They allow me three thousandths variation . . . but I make them RIGHT"

This particular adjustment does not call for extreme accuracy as accuracy goes in the Linotype factory. Three thousandths of an inch—the thickness of a sheet of No. 16 bond—is close enough for all practical purposes, but this man scorns any such tolerance. He likes to see his micrometer barrel come to a stop precisely on the mark. That spirit, carried through every Linotype operation, has had much to do with building up the Linotype's reputation for long life and trouble-free operation.

LINOTYPED IN GARAMOND AND GARAMOND BOLD

By MARLEN PEW

ANDREAS BJERRE, a famous Swedish scientist, has brought out a book covering his psychological studies of criminals guilty of murder. He finds that the determining factor which influences these atrocious acts is mental weakness and does not believe there is or could be such a thing as a criminal who would deserve to be called a "master mind" or who is in any respect clever, heroic or even courageous. He must be a weak person who turns to violence because he is incapable of meeting the demands of life on even terms with his fellows and, after a period of brooding, has deceived himself into the belief that only through the murder of an opponent or enemy may he escape from tortured thoughts. This is the inferiority complex in an extreme form. Dr. Bjerre believes fear of punishment is almost never a restraining influence in serious crime — criminals are driven on by motives or impulses too strong to be deterred by such a force.

EVERY experienced newspaper man, sooner or later in his career, is given opportunity to study criminals at short range. That the average murderer, caught in the toils of the law, is a mental weakling goes without saying, and much time is wasted around jails and courts in studying and writing about such people. It is perfectly apparent that they are weak, cowardly and stupid. Consider the time and perfectly good printing material that was flung away on Harry K. Thaw. Scores of New York newspaper men knew Thaw was morally and mentally unsound long before he shot Stanford White. Years before I got his number. I had happened to be in the corridor of the old Holland House around one o'clock one fall morning when the Pittsburgh millionaire, top-hat on the back of his round head, staggered in and approached a poor, old scrub-woman, down on her knees polishing the marble floor, unconscious of a menace from the rear. Without a word Thaw gave the woman a terrific kick. Groaning with pain she got to her feet and prepared to defend herself from further attack. The hotel night clerk swung over the counter and I also rushed up, demanding an explanation. Thaw pulled a roll of yellow-backs from his pocket, peeled one off and handed it to the woman, who, poor thing, thanked him and probably would have taken a second blow for a second bill. Hotel attaches rushed the brutal fool off to his room. He was drunk, but only a "nut" could be guilty of such an offense. Thaw wasted an aggregate of years of my time, I regret to say, but I am not the only reporter to make the sacrifice. By luck or misfortune I chanced to be passing Madison Square Garden one summer's night, having looked in at Harry Pollock's skating rink, when Lonergan of the World came running from Fourth Avenue, on the fly tipping me that a "big story had broken on the roof." We got an elevator to the open-air theatre garden, the first New York had seen, and found the place in commotion. Near the main entrance a body was stretched on the floor, the face covered with newspapers. A fireman told me it was the body of Stanford White, whom I had known as a first-night rounder and a great architectural artist. At the rear of the roof two firemen and a cop were holding Thaw by the arms. The place was being searched for Evelyn Nesbit, who, however, had disappeared. Presently Thaw was escorted to the Tenderloin Police Station, a dozen men of his class tagging along behind. He was searched and locked in a cell. He was pasty pale, flip in conversation and apparently enjoyed the sensation of being the center of attraction. He declined to talk about the case at first, but later told the story of how he had planned to kill White, first at Martin's Cafe, because of his alleged contribution to Evelyn Nesbit's moral dereliction, though it was very well known that Thaw's conduct toward the girl who later became his wife was scarcely calculated to elevate her. In later months and years we saw the man through two farcical trials. The criminal branch of our system of jurisprudence has much to answer for, particularly in the way of favoring the rich and giving short shrift to the poor, but the Thaw case from start to finish is the classic outrage on the Blind Goddess for all time. It was always interesting and important, of course, from the angle of dollar privilege, but Thaw himself was never interesting as a criminal character, his paranoia long having been apparent to newspaper men from the start of his career of violence.

DR. BJERRE, like most psychologists who write of crime, made his studies in prisons. He did not examine many types, it appears, but in his book draws the positive conclusion that the "master mind" does not exist in criminal life. While those who are caught in crime are usually of low mentality, we believe Dr. Bjerre's statement is much too sweeping. For instance, Mrs. Cassie Chadwick, whose frauds were clever enough to take in as victims some of the most cunning bankers of the middle west, certainly ranked as a "masterful" in financial adventure. Every newspaper man has at some time met criminals who were not more weak than the average man is weak, For the stupid Snyder woman and Gray, who practically handed each other over to the death house, one thinks of a dozen cases wherein the murderers were "clever" enough to have covered their crimes which are on police blotters today as unsolved. Who killed Elwell, the gambler? Does anyone who knew the facts doubt that the big cop Becker, murderer of Rosenthal, had uncommon courage and made a masterful fight to live? The determining factor in his crime may be called and doubtless was weak, but the man was head and shoulders above the average human in pure physical courage. Consider, also, the obviously guilty persons, particularly women, who have been "clever" enough to escape punishment for crimes charged against them, though circumstantial evidence was convincing, in this country during recent years. Were they weak? Did they lack courage to brave out the third degree?

THERE was nothing soft in the mentality of Albert Patrick, New York lawyer who, some 20 years ago, was convicted of murdering an aged millionaire client for the purpose of robbery, but finally wiggled himself out of Sing Sing death house by smart use of his law. Those of us who heard the old millionaire's valet, Jones, tell on the witness stand the story of how Patrick had duped him into the act of chloroforming his aged master while he slept were, it seems to me, justified at the time in giving Patrick a reputation as a "master mind" in criminality. I have heard old newspaper men, familiar with the mysterious case of Pearl Bryan, whose headless body was found in the Ohio river, near Cincinnati, declare that the young medical student Jackson, convicted of the crime, was a masterful type of criminal. Some excellent detective work snared Jackson and another student named Walling. It was believed that Walling was the tool of Jackson in the murder. Just before they were to be hanged Jackson agreed to write a confession, which would have cleared Walling, for which Milton A. McRae, of the Cincinnati Post, was to pay $3,500, the money to go to Jackson's mother who was in poverty. Jackson, however, later refused to write any statement and both went to the noose without a word of explanation. One of my earliest newspaper recollections is of a chalk plate made by Walter Evans, appearing in the Cleveland Press, which crudely depicted the hanging scene from "a telegraphic description." The Pearl Bryan mystery was never cleared.

BEFORE psycho-analysis was known outside of Vienna we covered the case of Roland Molineaux, in New York. What would the analysts have said of him? He was convicted of one of the most cunningly planned crimes that had ever been recorded up to that time. The man may have been a coward, though he did not shrink in his defense, but if guilty he was clever in crime. Molineaux, a rather handsome young fellow, was the son of a rich and distinguished chemist who had been famous as a Civil War general. The young man spent much time at a fashionable athletic club. In the course of an immoral life Molineaux ran afoul of an athletic trainer at the club named Harry Cornish. On Christmas day Cornish received through the mails a present in the form of a bottle of bromo seltzer in a handsome silver stand. No name was attached. Cornish put the bottle on his dresser. A few days later his landlady, a Mrs. Adams, complained of headache and Cornish invited her to use his medicine. She took a dose and fell dead. A post-mortem revealed cyanide of potassium, a rare poison. The police learned of Cornish's feud with Molineaux and were interested in the fact that the latter was engaged with his father in chemistry and had access to the poison. The young clubman was arrested. In this trial, the most complicated legal case I have ever witnessed, the hand-writing expert appeared conspicuously for the first time in a criminal cause. Molineaux was convicted on circumstantial evidence and went to the death house, but he, too, finally escaped punishment by pressing his case through the higher courts.

NATURALLY, in jails and in criminal courts the student of psychology, seeking to uncover the hidden causes of crime, must deal with the poorest, most incapable crooks, since they have been caught by mere cops. Study of criminals at large, if that were possible, might completely upset Dr. Bjerre's theories. It would not be expected that the good doctor could turn up for study a red-handed murderer, at least of the conventional type, but if he would look into some of our best established political, social and business circles he might find specimens of violent impulse and ruthless cruelty worthy of his records. There is no end of cleverness, masterfulness and courage which borders on heroism among super-criminals who do the job wholesale, seem wholly unconscious even of wrong-doing and escape all punishment, even the odium that was once believed to attach to exposed breaches of the civilized code. Where, for instance, does the theory of inferiority complex fit in the case of a man, so rich he could not in a lifetime spend one-half of his fortune, and who moves in the highest social circles of his community, who conspires with a crook to plant dynamite for the purpose of discrediting labor leaders working to organize his employes? What do the psychologists have to say of the motives of a man in high public office, who sells out his trust? Business life fairly reeks with strange types, up to all sorts of villany, whose psychic processes are wholly mysterious to those who believe that honesty is the best policy and that contentment may only be found in virtue. Murder is none the less interesting if done with "a bitter word." It is our notion that much perfectly good science is being wasted on the average run of subjects to be found in jails. The great revelation will come when Dr. Bjerre and his colleagues turn their sharp eyes into the souls of men who trample on the moral codes of life, yet triumph in all relations, at least material, that most folks think worth while.

R. D. Blumenfeld, editor-in-chief of the London Daily Express, and president-elect of the Institute of Journalists, Rt. Hon. T. P. O'Connor, veteran Member of Parliament and journalist, Charles Igglesden, president of the Institute, were among the gathering at the opening.

Edward Bostock, the famous showman has promised that all the royalties from his book of reminicences, "Menageries, Circuses, and Theatres," shall be given to the maintenance fund of the Oak Hill Home, and donations to the fund include £1,000 from the proprietors of the London Times, and £400 from the staff of that paper. The idea of the home is to provide a rest and convalescent home for journalists at a low charge, and appeal is being made to the British newspaper press to help in forming a fund.

PORTLAND (ME.) NEWS STARTS OCT. 3

Bucking Consolidation Tide, Its Owners Declare—Tobey Is President, Gruening Editor and Hoegg Managing Editor

The Evening News has been established in Portland, Me., and will make its initial appearance on Oct. 3. It makes the third daily newspaper in the Portland territory, the others being the Press-Herald and the Evening Express, owned by the Portland Maine Publishing Company.

E. H. Gruening

The establishment of the Evening News, its editors say, is a definite and, perhaps, a pioneer move against the tide of consolidation which has left many cities with but one organ of news and editorial comment.

According to a statement by its editors, it starts with excellent financial backing and will be operated as a strictly non-partisan, non-political and non-sectarian publication.

United Press service in the Portland territory has been obtained and the Evening News will also act as the representative of the United Press in supplying the news of the State of Maine.

It will be published at 22 Monument Square, in the retail business district, and from which point start all of the city and suburban trolley lines. The new plant is well equipped. Every piece of machinery, including eight Intertype machines, is new with the exception of the Hoe press, which has been rebuilt. An eight-column page, 12½ ems, will be used. The new paper will print a minimum of 16 pages daily and will probably run two afternoon editions. It will pay especial attention to pictures and has a new engraving plant together with staff photographers and artists.

The president of the Evening News Publishing Company is C. H. Tobey, formerly with the Boston Herald and later publisher of the Boston American. He also started new papers in Hudson, Westfield and Southbridge, Mass., and still owns the Southbridge News. He plans to give his entire time to the Portland News, however, and has moved to that city.

Ernest Gruening, editor, has been managing editor of the Boston Traveler, managing editor and editor of the Boston Journal, managing editor of the New York Tribune, and managing editor of the New York Nation. He has contributed extensively to magazines on political and journalistic topics and has edited a two-volume symposium, "These United States." A book entitled "Mexico and Its Heritage," will be published by the Century Company early next year. In 1924, he was national director of publicity for the La Follette campaign.

Daniel W. Hoegg, managing editor, was editor of the Evening Express, resigning to go with the new paper. He has been associated with the Express for many years in all capacities. He was one of the founders of the Maine Publicity Bureau and of the Maine Automobile Association and is active in many civic and service clubs in Portland and the State.

Robert S. Boyd, treasurer, formerly designed and sold business systems for the Library Bureau. Later, he was cost and factory expert for the American Thread Company. He is now in charge of sales and advertising for the E. Corey Company, Portland, a large iron and steel concern.

Walter R. Pennell, advertising manager, served with several industrial companies, the Evening Express and Lewiston and Bangor (Me.) papers.

Mrs. Emma W. Moseley, society editor, resigned from the Express to go with the News. She is prominent in club work in the State.

ADDING RADIO SERVICE

The feature service of the Associated Press shortly after Oct. 1 will start a radio news service carrying radio programs, news and features for members. The service will be illustrated.

KIRKWOOD POLICIES PAID

First payment on the total of $625,000 life insurance policies on the life of the late Irwin Russell Kirkwood, editor of the Kansas City Star, was paid by the Sentinel Life Insurance Company to the trust department of the New England National Bank & Trust Company. The check amounted to $52,500. Later the Midland Life Insurance Company paid a check for $26,185.40 to John A. Wilson, executor of the Kirkwood will, on two policies. The National Fidelity Insurance Company of Kansas sent a check to the trust company, for $35,000 covering its policies.

COWDRAY VISITS TRIBUNE PLANT

Oil Magnate and Publisher Concerned at British Divorce Law

Lord Cowdray, oil magnate and publisher, made an extensive study of the Chicago Tribune's plant, September 17, before leaving to inspect his oil properties near Tulsa, Okla. The British nobleman, whose family name is Weetman H. Pearson, is chairman of the Westminster Press, which publishes the Westminster Gazette in London and numerous papers in the provinces.

In his capacity as a newspaper man, Lord Cowdray condemned the recent legislation prohibiting the publication of divorce proceedings in England. "This legislation is a dangerous interference with the freedom of the press," he said. It could not yet be determined, Lord Cowdray declared, whether the number of divorces had increased in England under cover of privacy.

LIBEL SUIT IN OKMULGEE

Damages in the sum of $40,000 is asked by Ed Bloomfield, an electrician's helper, in a suit filed against the Okmulgee Times Publishing Company, owners and publishers of the Okmulgee Times and the Okmulgee Democrat. Bloomfield alleges his reputation was damaged to that amount by stories published in the two papers, which recounted his arrest on a statutory charge which was dismissed when he married the girl who filed them.

TULSA DAILY YEAR OLD

The Tulsa (Okla.) Evening World launched as the afternoon edition of the Tulsa Morning World in September 1926, celebrated its first anniversary Sept. 14. It was the 22nd anniversary of the morning paper. Eugene Lorton is president and publisher and F. O. Larson vice-president and business manager.

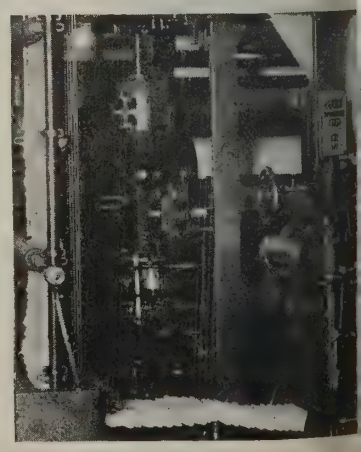
From the story to the newsstand—SPEED

Where the presses leave off C-H Conveyors continue the pace

AS the sun drops below the west stands a young pitcher hurls the last strike of a game that places his name in the enduring halls of baseball's fame. The "mob" rises in wild acclaim to the new hero of the national pastime.



Up in the press box an unemotional sports writer tears a sheet from a copy pad and passes it to the telegrapher at his side. The story is on its way.

Almost before the last customer has left the park the boys at the turnstiles are calling "Sporting Edition—Latest Complete Box Scores—No Hit Game."

A miracle of speed that occurs every day. A miracle that is partly personnel—partly mechanical equipment.

Back in the newspaper plant, compositors, foundrymen, pressmen, have spent "fighting minutes" to get the "story" thru the presses.

As fast as the papers leave the presses, C-H Despatch Conveyors whisk them in a steady stream up thru a ceiling, around a corner right to delivery tables and waiting trucks. No lost minutes here—no congested aisles— no confusion. C-H Conveyors link the chain of speed between presses and trucks. They are an essential part of the news-plant's equipment that "gets the sheet on the street first."

C-H Conveyors cut to an absolute minimum t time required to get the paper from the pres to the street. Carrying the papers as fast the presses can deliver them—up, around, any direction, to any distance—and deposit them in counted piles—C-H Conveyors sa precious minutes and costly labor. They sa their cost in short order.

"The Morning Call," Allentown, Pa., (c culation over 33,000) is one of many medi sized newspapers which save time with C- Conveyors. Note also the C-H Press Conn Station.

INTERTYPE IDEAL NEWS FACE

M M M M M

What is the Most Natural Type Face?

You cannot go very far from the type that the average man or woman knew from their first school books as the natural letters.

Freak types — shaded on the wrong parts of the letters, or made the same thickness all over — are not natural types. Hence, they are not easy to read in newspapers.

Freak type faces are sometimes used with fair results for a few lines in an advertisement. But the group of type faces that have been most widely used for news faces is the Modern Roman group — the group of type faces from which most school books up to the sixth grade are printed.

Modern Roman type faces that have been shaded the same thickness of stroke all over — made into a monotone — have never been used on young and tender eyes in school books. A monotone type face is not a natural type face.

Intertype Ideal News Face is one of the Modern Roman group of type faces — the one news face that did not lose its real Modern Roman character while being adapted to the mechanical requirements of a newspaper. It has retained the perfect balance of the Modern Roman types. It has retained the correct spacing around each letter as well as through each letter. Result: 100% legibility and longer life for the matrices.

The New York Times, The Cleveland Plain Dealer, Dallas Times-Herald, Seattle Times, and nearly two hundred others have adopted Intertype Ideal News Face after comparing it with what the market has to offer.

PIONEER ADVERTISING WOMAN DIES

Jane J. Martin Was for Many Years Advertising Manager of Sperry & Hutchinson—Active in Club Work

Miss Jane J. Martin, widely known in the advertising field, died Wednesday, after a long illness, at Maplewood, N. J

Miss Jane J. Martin

Until she was compelled to give up active work several years ago she was advertising manager for Sperry & Hutchinson, New York.

Miss Martin entered business as a stenographer when she was 16 years old and later became a pioneer woman in the advertising field. She was one of the founders and honorary president of the League of Advertising Women, a director of the New York League of Business and Professional Women and of the State Federation of Women's Clubs, vice-chairman of the New York City Federation of Women's Clubs, and a member of the Women's Press Club and the City Club.

Helen M. Rockey, president of the New York League of Advertising Women, said:

"The League has lost, in Jane Martin, one of its founders, its president for seven years, a women who spent her energy and life trying to help women establish themselves in the field of advertising."

Funeral services were held Friday night at 8 o'clock at the Second Presbyterian Church, Ninety-sixth street and Central Park West.

KILLED AT CROSSING

Manning of Chicago American and Wife in Fatal Wreck

E. M. Manning, magazine page editor of the Chicago Evening American, and his wife, Marian, were killed in a grade crossing accident near Chicago Sept. 19. The car in which they were returning to Chicago after spending the week-end in Wisconsin was struck by a train and completely demolished. Mrs. Manning was instantly killed. Manning was rushed to the Victory Memorial Hospital in Waukegan, where it was found that his back was broken. He died about three hours later.

Mr. Manning's two brothers, Levin Manning and A. D. Manning, are both on the staff of the Chicago American.

CLIFFORD J. OWEN

Clifford J. Owen, 77, veteran newspaper executive of the Pacific Coast, died on Sept. 11, at his home in Portland. He was general manager of the Portland Telegram from 1899 to 1906 and following that was general manager of the San Francisco Call. His father, J. J. Owen, came west in the early days and founded the San Jose Mercury. The son received his early training on that paper. After leaving the Call, Mr. Owen was general manager of the San Jose Times and later of the Fresno Tribune and of the Pendleton (Ore.) Tribune.

FRANK CLINTON WIGHT

Frank Clinton Wight, 45, editor of the Engineering News-Record, and president of the National Conference of Business Paper Editors, died suddenly Sept. 19, at his home in Summit, N. J. Mr. Wight became an editor of Engineering News in 1907, served as its managing editor from 1912 to 1917, continued with the enlarged publication, Engineering News Record, and was made its editor three years ago.

Obituary

WHAT EYE SPECIALISTS SAY ABOUT

Ionic No. 5

TRADE LINOTYPE MARK

MERGENTHALER LINOTYPE CO.
BROOKLYN, NEW YORK

GENTLEMEN:

You are to be congratulated upon initiating the movement for using Ionic No. 5 type. It is more distinct, more legible and not only gives the printed column more neatness and distinctness, but ease of perception and interpretation, which I consider to be the two most important factors in reading.

After all, a person has only a certain limited amount of energy at his disposal during the act of reading. The more energy one has to use up in the act of seeing, the less he has left for the act of interpreting the meaning. Reading the printed column in Ionic type one uses up less units of energy in the act of reading, which enables him to use more in the act of interpretation.

Therefore, by introducing Ionic No. 5, you make it possible for one to get the most out of his reading.

will again be ready to stand sponsors to pioneering efforts for the advancement of aviation.

"There are bound to be risks and casualties in the development of any science; and there is a justification for grave losses, if the work is performed for the benefit of humanity.

"Mr. Hearst has in the past and will in the future continue to spend much more money in great public policy movements and reforms than has been represented in these airplane adventures. The commission he recently organized and is sponsoring for the study of crime is an example. Much money is spent in such projects over a long period of time and in a less spectacular way than in the airplane exploits."

Increased cost to press associations brought about by the amazing aviation activities of the summer may be largely assigned to cable tolls. The Associated Press estimated that $15,000 had been spent this summer bringing in airplane flight stories from all over the world. It is an A. P. policy to cut down on other routine news when something big is breaking which accounts for this low figure in comparison to others. Besides the A. P. has connections with news agencies on the Continent and in Canada, saving the membership considerable expense. In some cases individual member papers bore the brunt of the increase in outlay. This was true in the case of the Honolulu Star-Bulletin which engaged an airplane to search for missing flyers and assigned four extra men to assist the A. P. in collecting the Dole flight news.

Marc A. Rose, executive editor of International News Service, informed EDITOR & PUBLISHER that this Hearst news gathering organization has spent $50,000 covering aviation since spring.

"This sum bears no relation to what the Hearst newspapers did and it includes no stunts," Mr. Rose said.

"We paid more covering Lindbergh alone than we did to report the British general strike."

Mr. Rose said the $50,000 spent by I. N. S. included the following items: Salary, extra expenses, chartering airplanes for men following Lindberg from Paris to Brussels and to London; chartering airplanes costing $1 a minute, following Chamberlin and Levine on their various hops from Berlin to Vienna and to Paris; cost of airplane from Le Bourget to Ver-sur-Mer, where Commander Byrd landed; salary of man and expenses on trip to United States from France with Lindbergh on U. S. S. Memphis, and back to Paris again; special wires between offices and flying fields; a long wire from Brunswick to Atlanta, Ga., to cover start of the Paul Redfern flight; cables from Rio when Redfern was not found there, but was reported found; and special fees to ship captains for reporting the sighting of airplanes plus the regular radio tolls.

Robert Bender, United Press vice-president, said the U. P. had spent $25,000 covering aviation, with this sum divided about half-and-half on cable tolls and extra editorial expense.

Added to the money actually spent there is a lot of unwritten aviation coverage history, history that caused considerable worry but cost little and yielded less.

The North American Newspaper Alliance, of which David E. Smiley is general manager, had numerous contingent contracts with airmen who failed to fulfill the terms and therefore did not receive the money from American newspapers which they expected.

Among these contracts not carried out were those between the N. A. N. A. and Captain Courtney, pilot of the Whale, which after many false starts finally hopped as far as Corunna, Spain, before giving up the endeavor and moving on to Venice for the Schneider cup races; between N.A.N.A. and Givon, a French flyer for his own story, should he reach this country from France; a similar contract with Tarascon, another French flyer; and an arrangement between this same American newspaper feature group and an Australian flyer named Giles who at one time entertained the ambition of flying from Australia to the United States to take part in the Dole races.

The N. A. N. A. had a contract with the flyers who went down with the London-to-London plane, the Sir John Carling.

Mr. Smiley said that what expenses were incurred in arranging these unsuccessful contracts were minor. Included among the N.A.N.A. expenses was a sort of vacation trip given to James C. Collins of the New York World's staff, who was sent early in July to Newfoundland to await the expected arrival of Captain Courtney and returned only last week to New York.

The market for aviator by-line stories made bullish by Col. Lindbergh has now declined. Ruth Elder's representatives visited several newspapers and syndicates, EDITOR & PUBLISHER learned, and two have turned down an opportunity to buy the news rights to her projected flight from Roosevelt field to Paris with the "American Girl," "for the glorification of Wheeling, W. Va." From one syndicate she asked $100,000 before being politely refused.

How aviation news rots quickly was shown in the case of the stories of Maitland and Hegenberger, the army flyers, purchased by the Times group. Army authorities refused to allow the two men to lend their names for newspaper exploitation immediately, and when consent was finally granted, the purchasers cut the price to one-third the original bid.

National Advertising Increasing In Newspapers

Within ten years, national advertising in newspapers has approximately multiplied itself by three. Estimated volume for 1917 was $80,000,000; estimated volume for 1926 was $235,000,000.

Year	Estimated Investment	Per cent Increase
1914	$50,000,000	..
1915	55,000,000	10%
1916	75,000,000	36
1917	80,000,000	6
1918	88,000,000	10
1919	150,000,000	70
1920	200,000,000	33
1921	180,000,000	–10% loss
1922	200,000,000	11
1923	205,000,000	2½
1924	215,000,000	4
1925	220,000,000	2
1926	235,000,000	6

Newspaper publishers may be interested in comparing these gains with the gains recorded by their own newspapers.

National advertising, when compared with total advertising (including classified), shows that in 1915 it was 20% of the total income and in 1926 was 30% of the total advertising revenue.

Year	Percent of Total Income	Year	Percent of Total Income
1915	20%	1921	27.6
1916	20	1922	28.5
1917	20	1923	28.8
1918	20	1924	28.5
1919	30	1925	29.5
1920	30	1926	30

Newspapers divided $50,000,000 of national advertising income during 1914; in 1926 they divided $235,000,000. At the present average rate of increase, this volume of national newspaper advertising will be doubled within the next five years.

Advertise your market and your medium through the advertising columns of the NEWS paper of the publishing and advertising fields.

are to be printed by the Dayton Linotype Company.

A facsimile of the front page of the Detroit Shopping News was sent out by the Merchants, Sept. 19 with an explanatory letter to Dayton residents.

The text of the letter follows:

"In a number of cities merchants have found it of advantage to the general public and profitable to themselves to use as an advertising medium what is known as the Shopping News. In order that you may be able to visualize just what is meant by the Shopping News, we are inclosing with this letter a sample page from the Shopping News published by the merchants of Detroit. On the reverse side we have printed in detail description of just how it is operated and how it is distributed.

The success of this idea in other cities and its value to the merchants and their patrons have impressed the Dayton merchants for a long time and they have been for several years considering how they could inaugurate the movement here. Recently the way has opened up for us to be able to go ahead and a definite procedure to get started has been decided upon.

"The newspapers have, the merchants feel, taken a very unwise and selfish attitude toward the project. When they found that we were serious in our determination to inaugurate the Shopping News, they formed what they called the Publishers' Association and went so far as to notify one of the subscribers that their advertising would not be accepted in their papers. The other merchants associated in this enterprise took this notification to the one store as a notification to all and they are, therefore, out of the papers.

"We have a very high appreciation of the value of well conducted newspapers to the community. It is farthest from our thought to do anything that would destroy their business. Many of us have assured the newspapers that we had no intention of cutting our newspaper advertising appropriation. The Shopping News would eliminate other phases of publicity. It is a matter of common knowledge that the newspapers have received a degree of support from Dayton merchants and Dayton industry far in excess of that which newspapers receive in cities of much larger size.

"We are writing this letter to explain to you why our advertisements are not to be found in the Dayton Daily News, the Evening Herald and the Dayton Journal. We have been denied advertising space in these papers and we want you to know the reason why. We certainly feel that we cannot allow the newspapers to dictate as to how we shall conduct our business or how we shall spend our own money for advertising.

"The experience in other cities where the Shopping News has been circulated has proven that newspaper advertising space is not reduced. It actually works out that the Shopping News makes advertising space, the principal thing that the newspapers have to sell, really more valuable because it raises the standard of advertising. We are confident that our decision to adopt this method of publicity is for our welfare and the good of the general public and increases our opportunity to serve.

"The newspaper appeal to so-called law and order and the enforcement of an ancient ordinance, is foolishness. A strict interpretation of the ordinance would deny the possibility of distributing the newspaper itself. Their plea for law and order is nothing more than a subterfuge to protect their own selfish interests.

"The newspapers have made it a definite fight and as a contest in which we believe we have the right on our side, we ask your sympathetic understanding and your support."

The newspapers have not answered this letter.

Differing from the policy followed by New Haven, Conn., newspapers in their six-year fight against the New Haven Shopping News, which ended this year with victory for the press and suspension of the handbills, the Dayton newspapers have passed on to their reading public some information regarding the battle with the advertisers.

The impending fight was first made a subject of public discussion Sept. 10, when the Dayton Herald reported that the Dayton Typographical Union Number 57 had passed a resolution denouncing the proposed "Shoppers Guide" and that the directorate of the local chamber of commerce had refused to endorse or approve it.

In its resolution, unanimously passed, the typographical union listed the following objections to the Dayton Shopping News:

"Not a dime was to be invested by publishers of the Shopping News, nor were they to pay any taxes—'taking what profit they may derive out of the city as they are not residents.'

"They are operating in competition with concerns employing members of our organization who have hundreds of thousands of dollars invested both in real estate and equipment, are taxpayers and their profits are distributed among the business men of Dayton and help to maintain the same."

Four days later the newspapers published their own editorial objections, attacking in front page editorials an "outside advertising company" which, in the words of the Dayton Herald, "has no particular interest in Dayton or its community beauty and progress, and is now planning to systematically throw advertising sheets in every yard and home in Dayton."

Both editorials recalled that shortly after the noted Dayton flood a local ordinance was passed, on Aug. 15, 1914, to be specific, which makes it unlawful "for any person in distributing handbills or other advertising matter to throw, cast or deposit or cause such handbills to be thrown, cast or deposited in or upon any yards, doorsteps, porch, street, alley, lane, or public place within the City of Dayton." Fine or imprisonment or both is the penalty.

The newspapers of Dayton editorially denounced merchants of the city who would become law violators. The editorial in the News was headed "Respect for the Law," and that in the Herald was "Breaking Down the Law."

Asked the News:

"Is the spectacle of prominent business men, men outstanding in our community affairs, moving in deliberate defiance of law, wholesome or helpful?"

Then it questioned the "serious and threatening portent" of "men in high places whose lives, generally speaking, have been an example to the youth of this community, should be making their plans to adopt a law-be-damned attitude."

To which Robert J. Elder and C. H. Reiling, sales manager of the Elder and Johnston Company replied in a statement to EDITOR & PUBLISHER:

"Piffle."

Mr. Elder and Mr. Reiling said the law has never been enforced. There are three companies in Dayton today whose sole business is distributing handbills. Dayton itself distributes handbills, as has many of its stores for many years, he said.

"Ten years ago we tested the law," Mr. Reiling said. "We had a man arrested. The case only got as far as police court, the judge saying that it was not the spirit of the law to interfere with advertising."

The newspapers do not consider the law sufficiently tested and there is talk current now of an injunction suit.

Besides scoffing at the ordinance prohibiting handbills, Mr. Elder, a competent spokesman of the merchants, said to EDITOR & PUBLISHER:

"We are not dissatisfied with newspaper advertising, and we do not want to run our own newspaper. We looked upon the Shopping News as a supplemental medium. As far as our own store was concerned we are going to use the money budgeted for direct mail and billboards for the Shopping News. We have no grudge against the newspapers and realize that a community couldn't exist without its press.

"We first heard of the Shopping News idea through a close business connection of ours in Youngstown. He told us of

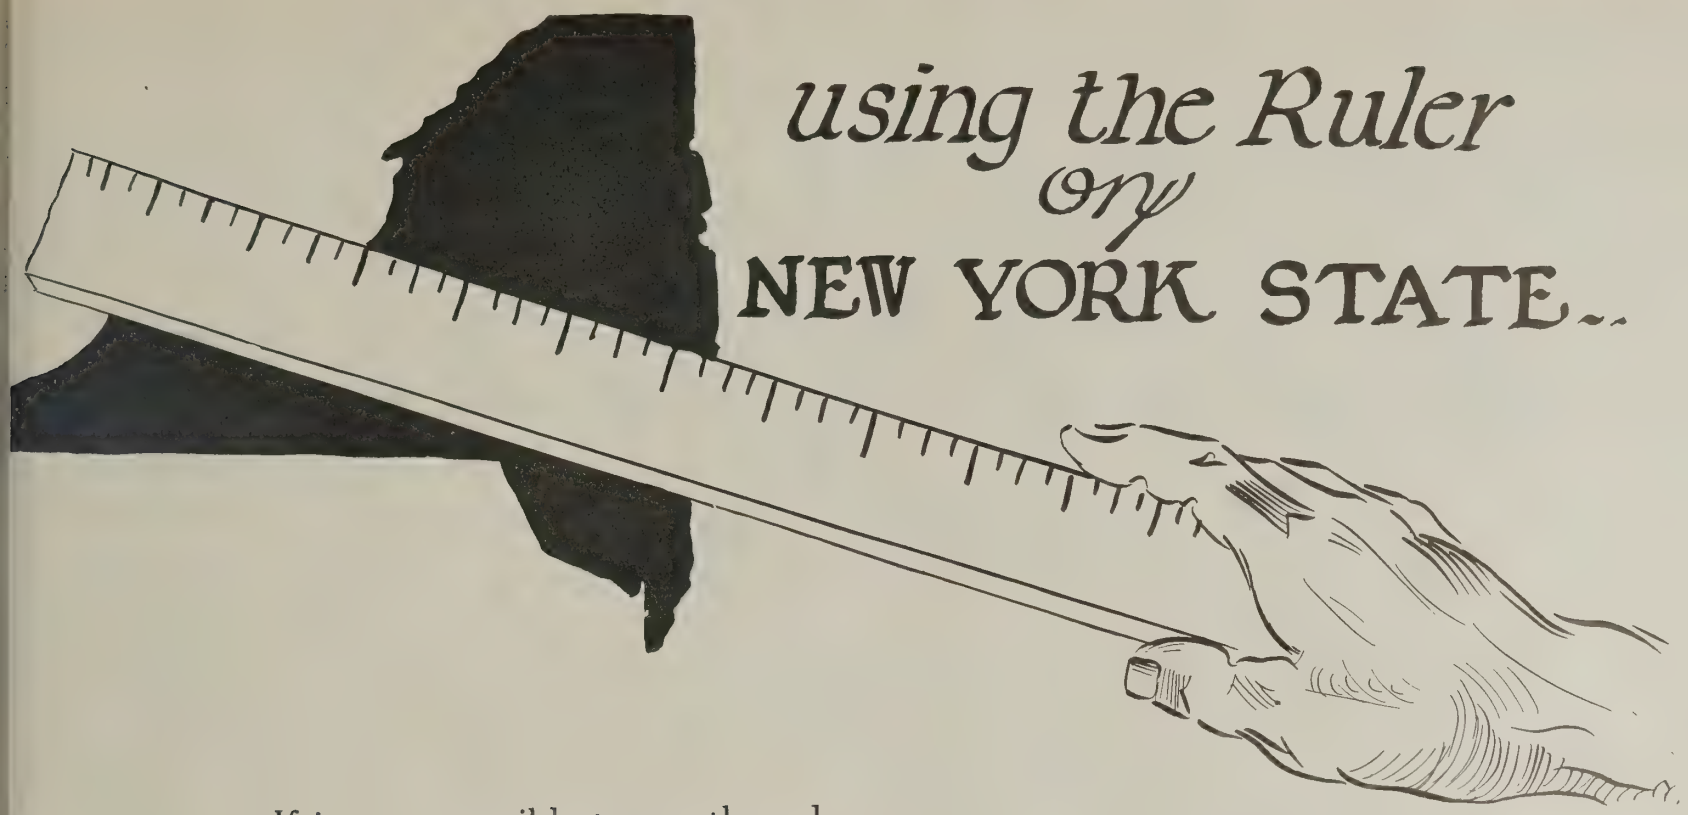
Supreme in RADIO



For years Radio advertisers, both national and local, have used more space in The Sun than in any other paper in the world.

During the first eight months of 1927 The Sun published nearly three times as much Radio Advertising as the second New York newspaper.

using the Ruler on NEW YORK STATE...

If it were possible to use the ruler or yard stick as a unit of measure to determine the relative buying power of New York State in comparison with other national markets, the result would not only astound the space buyer but his final conclusion would be that New York State should be his first market regardless how limited his advertising appropriation may be. For, the Empire State Market offers all the advantages of all the other markets combined. It has density of population. Its channels of distribution are well organized. Its buying power is second to none, and the advertising appeal will reach the greatest numbers of buyers at the lowest investment cost.

Compare then, New York with any market. Where can you find class plus mass distribution for the same cost?

The newspapers listed below are ready to serve the national advertiser not only by giving him all the facts on each important center, but will gladly work with the advertiser's sales organization to help him with his distribution.

DAYTON DAILIES AND STORES WAR OVER SHOPPING NEWS

results obtained through using this type of advertising.

"'And what about your newspaper advertising?' I asked him.

"We almost doubled that,' was his reply.

"We have access to his books and were able to check up on this assertion and found it to be correct.

"We studied the Shopping News in other cities where they have been used, notably in Detroit, Cincinnati, Minneapolis, Seattle and Los Angeles. We have connections in all these cities that gave us good reports. They all said that they found it advisable not to cut down their newspaper space while buying advertising in Shopping News."

Mr. Jones of the Herald and Journal declared he had heard differently when he had investigated the Shopping News story from the newspaper viewpoint. He said that in many cases the merchants insisted they had no intention of cutting their newspaper copy, but that newspapers had found they had lost linage as a result of the Shopping News.

The merchants complain that they have not been given an opportunity to present their views to the publishers. On the first meeting of the directorate of the Chamber of Commerce the newspaper men were in the majority and in consequence the merchants called another meeting of the same body at which the newspaper men were not present in person, but were represented by letters written by ex-Gov. Cox and Mr. Burkam and read to those attending by Robert Nevin, attorney for the Journal and Herald.

The contents of these letters were not made public. In effect they traced the history of good deeds performed for Dayton by its press, setting forth in detail how they had worked for the benefit of business in the community, and telling how they feared that the advent of the Shopping News would damage them financially.

In lieu of issuing Mr. Burkam's letter without his consent, Mr. Jones made the following statement to EDITOR & PUBLISHER:

"The Dayton newspapers have always co-operated in every possible way to help its merchants. No increase in rates was contemplated. The only increases we have ever made have been those justified by A. B. C. figures.

"We feel we have put out good papers for our town and see no need of any competing media. Dayton has a small foreign population and colored population, the majority of its inhabitants being mechanics of a well-educated class who demand a good newspaper. We contend that there are less than 100 homes in Dayton which are not receiving a Dayton paper.

"It has proved in other cities where the Shopping News has been published that in time newspaper linage has been affected. We feel that if a Shopping News was started in Dayton we would experience a noticeable decrease in Sunday linage and it would also affect our evening papers as well as the morning."

As the fight begins both sides are cocky.

One merchant leader, who, however declined to allow his name used in connection with it, said:

"This tiff is going to teach us all, I believe, that we have been over-emphasizing the value of publicity. Propaganda in favor of newspaper advertising has been stuffed down our throats by the newspapers for years, and now we are going to have a chance to spew it up."

Others confessed they were not so sure of success, but they too didn't want their names used.

The newspapers claim to be in a very satisfactory position in regard to advertising revenue, despite the loss of 12 local advertisers. These 12, it is stated, do not begin to dominate the local field of newspaper advertisers. Both newspapers admit that if the Shopping News continues any length of time there must be some curtailment of operating expenses, but they believe that the decrease in white paper cost due to smaller papers will help considerably and do not intend to cut down their local editorial staffs.

One set of figures furnished EDITOR & PUBLISHER showed a total local business of approximately 140,000 inches a month in all papers, compared with about 40,000 inches involved in the present boycott.

Exclusive of Sundays the Dayton Herald has shown an increase of 3,217 inches for the first 20 days of September this year in local business compared to last year; the News has shown an increase of 2,374 inches and the Journal a loss of 1,133 inches."

It is on record at the Daily News office that there were 37,198 inches of local business placed in the first 20 days of September in the News compared with 41,166 inches placed for the same period last year; 28,336 inches in the Herald compared with 27,562, of last year; and 12,367 of the Journal compared with 19,118 of last year.

Immediate effect of the boycott on the Daily News is shown as follows: (Figures for local business only).

Sept. 14, 1927	.....	2,425 inches
Sept. 14, 1926	.....	1,424 inches

Sept. 20, 1927	.....	1,430 inches
Sept. 20, 1926	.....	1,260 inches

In the early days at least, there is very little bitter feeling being wasted between the contestants of this advertising battle.

"The only fight we are interested in is a fight for business," said Mr. Elder, merchant.

Mr. Jones started as office boy on the Herald and Journal, has never worked for anyone else, and knows all the business men of the town intimately.

Mr. Burkam was in Cincinnati on Wednesday this week.

Forgetting their own local ring, Mr. Elder, Mr. Reiling, Mr. Jones, Mr. Mahoney and Ex-Governor Cox, were among those watching the Dempsey-Tunney fight in Chicago on Thursday.

AGAIN SEEKS MAYORALITY

McKay of Tampa Times Champions Reform of City's Government

TAMPA, Fla., Sept. 21.—D. B. McKay, owner and editor of the Tampa Daily Times, has qualified as a candidate for mayor in the white primary to be held Oct. 4. He is running without opposition. Mr. McKay, who has for many years owned and edited Tampa's oldest newspaper, has been active in all municipal matters. For ten years he served as mayor before the adoption of the present commission-manager form of government. Having bitterly opposed the change from the old council form, he recently succeeded in having a charter-board elected to revise the city's government. In the charter-board election Mr. McKay was chosen as one of the board, and was subsequently made chairman. The election for ratification or rejection of the proposed new charter is to be held shortly, and its adoption is being forecast by those acquainted with the political strength of the publisher.

In the event of the new charter being adopted, as now seems assured, Mr. McKay has stated he will not be a candidate for mayor. In the primary of Oct. 4 he is running for the nomination for the post of mayor-commissioner and two of his personal and political friends are seeking nomination as commissioners, both like Mr. McKay, without opposition.

HOST TO LEGION DELEGATES

Chicago News Holds Open House in Paris Office to American Visitors

The office of the Chicago Daily News on the Place de l'Opera, in the center of Paris, served as the observation post for dozens of American visitors at the review of the American Legion parade, which was cheered by the greatest gathering of Parisians since the victory demonstration following the World War.

The office maintained "open house" all day. The staff, in addition to writing a running story of the events from the windows and receiving messages relayed by telephone from observers along the march and sending messenger boys to the cable offices, answered inquiries.

The hospitality of the Daily News' Paris office even extended to the removal of the "no smoking allowed" sign which had hung in the office since its inauguration many years ago.

Objects to Leaving Tremendous Power of Press to Quacks

Physicians should advertise instead of leaving "the tremendous power of newspaper publicity as a terrible weapon in the hands of quacks and charlatans" in the opinion of Governor Fred W. Green of Michigan.

Addressing the Wayne County Medical Society, Detroit, this week Governor Green said:

"I am not pleading that you use the newspapers for your own sake. You do not need it. But I ask it for the sake of the public. Perhaps you will say that the public should discriminate, but too much cannot be expected of us laymen in the matter of discriminating intelligence."

ARRESTED FOR LIBEL

Our Own World of Letters

By JAMES MELVIN LEE

"A NEWSPAPER man's biography" is what Paxton Hibben calls his "Henry Ward Beecher: An American Portrait," released by the George H. Doran Company, on Sept. 23. Not because the author has been a newspaper man for many years, but because the files of contemporary newspapers were so largely used to counteract the growth of legend in writing the life of Beecher. In the same way that Claude G. Bowers, of the New York Evening World made free use of the files of the National Gazette, the Independent Chronicle, Aurora, Porcupine's Gazette and other journals of the day in writing his "Jefferson and Hamilton," Mr. Hibben checks the myths that have grown up about the Pastor of Plymouth Church by the files of The Independent, the Indiana State Journal, the Cincinnati Post and the New York Times, Tribune and Herald of the days of Raymond, Greeley and the elder Bennett.

Of the revivication of the country that followed the Civil War, Mr. Hibben writes:

"Samuel Bowles, Joseph Medill, E. L. Godkin, Charles A. Dana were men of the new order. Their minds cut through sentimentality like a knife in cheese. They did not care a fig whether Beecher had committed adultery or not . . . But these men, directing the great newspapers of America, were determined that the facts should not be deliberately perverted merely to save the Great Preacher—that the American public should not be forced to gulp a colossal fraud for the benefit of the scrip-holders of Plymouth Church."

The Beecher-Tilton scandal of 1874-1875, to which reference is made, received probably more newspaper space than has ever been accorded any single private event in history. The testimony alone at the trial of Tilton vs. Beecher, in Brooklyn City Court, ran to over a million words, and was printed at length in the leading dailies. Of this case, Mr. Hibben says:

"It is one of the fine things about the newspapers of the United States that in 1872, before anything specific about Beecher's trouble with Tilton had come out, Victoria Woodhull peddled her story of Beecher's adultery from newspaper office to newspaper office, and found no takers. Mr. Beecher was approaching sixty. His life had been a singularly useful one. Even the newspapers that disagreed fundamentally with his political views, his theological tenets, his social theories, and called him a 'pulpit mountebank' felt that he was entitled to the benefit of the doubt."

When the scandal finally broke, "nothing since the outbreak of the Civil War has excited such intense interest all over the United States," said the Brooklyn Argus. "All the papers, from Brooklyn to the smallest hamlet in Oregon, are anxious to know the truth."

It was particularly in the newspapers outside of New York that the Beecher-Tilton case was handled with enterprise, according to Beecher's latest biographer:

"The Chicago Tribune published Mrs. Tilton's pathetic letters to her husband, written between 1866 and 1870, from whose lines peered the tragic story of her struggle, her frantic bewilderment and her despair. The same journal also printed Elizabeth Cady Stanton's cogent analysis of the whole ugly business of Plymouth Church's activities. Indeed, this Western newspaper set a pace that every daily in the country was compelled to follow and made the question of truth or falsity in the Beecher case a test of American honesty."

Not only in the Beecher Scandal, which Chester S. Lord, of the old Sun, says "created more public excitement and more public interest than any trial I recall," but throughout his presentation of Henry Ward Beecher's life, Mr. Hibben makes constant and free use of contemporary journals. In regard to Beecher's early position on the slavery question, Mr. Hibben relates that he spent three months hunting for a file of an obscure religious weekly which Henry Ward Beecher edited for a few months while he was a divinity student in Cincinnati. No such file was to be found. But in the Cincinnati Gazette of the same period, Mr. Hibben came upon some of Mr. Beecher's editorials reprinted from the Journal, which gave the clue he was in search of to Henry Ward Beecher's attitude towards slavery in his younger days. This was followed up by an examination of the files of the Political Beacon, of Lawrenceburgh, Ind., where Beecher had his first pastorate, the Indiana State Journal, the Greencastle (Ind.) Visitor and the Brookville (Ind.) American, and step by step the legend of Henry Ward Beecher's youthful Abolitionism was probed and the truth laid bare.

Similiary, through a study of English newspapers during October, 1863, the myth of Henry Ward Beecher's triumph as an unofficial "Minister Plenipotentiary," launched by Oliver Wendell Holmes in the Atlantic Monthly in 1874, is dispelled.

Over fifty daily and weekly newspapers are included in the list of sources cited in Mr. Hibben's "Henry Ward Beecher: An American Portrait."

THE magazine article of the month, so far as newspaper men are concerned, is "The Art of Ballyhoo" by Silas Bent in Harper's. A more descriptive head would have been "Fashions in News." This fashion expressed in musical terms is "The Saxophone of Sex."

But other things are discussed in the article, such as the modern interest in scientific news—something which newspaper publishers have been far tardier to recognize than publishers of books.

Mr. Bent next takes up for discussion this memorandum which the elder Joseph Pulitzer once dictated for a subordinate:

What is original, distinctive, dramatic romantic, thrilling, unique, curious, quaint, humorous, odd, apt to be talked about, without shocking good taste or lowering the general tone, good tone, and above all without impairing the confidence of the people in the truth of the stories and the character of the paper for reliability and scrupulous cleanness.

Then this comment is made:

This is news in lighter vein. The heavier stuff must deal with sex, violence, conflict, mystery or suspense; one of these, or a combination of them. Such newspapers need not contain a line of useful information.

A look is taken at the reported "suicide wave" among school and college students. A shot is aimed at those newspapers which print odds and guesses on horse races. The amount of space given to the death of Charles W. Eliot, ex-president of Harvard, and that of Rudolph Valentino is rehashed. Somewhat startling, however, is the discussion of how Lindbergh's flight was handled by American newspapers.

Speaking on this point Mr. Bent says of the return voyage on the U. S. S. Memphis, flagship of Vice Admiral Burrage:

Among the newspaper men aboard was the New York Times reporter who was writing the aviator's "signed" stories. (The stories were printed in thirty-odd newspapers, and presumably were accepted as coming from Lindbergh himself.) This reporter, and the others aboard, found that their material was censored. Even a bulletin must have the O. K. of Commander Bagley. Not since the end of the World War had any American newspaper man submitted to censorship. What was the Navy's interest in this story? Lindbergh was not consulted as to what should be deleted. The Commander of the Memphis took it upon himself to say what should and should not be made known to the American public.

The interest of the Navy in the Lindbergh dispatches, according to Mr. Bent, was that some of its advisers had "belittled trans-oceanic flights and now wished to draw a red herring across the trail."

The concluding thought which Mr. Bent wants to leave with his reader is:

The inflation of matter appealing to unconcious passions and hungers continues. The news which startles, thrills and entertains is still blown up as vigorously as the top balloon of Queen Marie's visit. Thus does the American press exemplify day by day the grandiose, the brobdingnagian art of ballyhoo.

Whether one agrees with all the points raised by Mr. Bent or not does not affect the assertion with which this comment opens—the leading article of the month for members of the working press.

Always Reliable

Mr. Tompkins starts his fire with such chips as:

> Of all American journalists, the leader in ability and position is popularly thought to be the Washington correspondent; and of all the Washington correspondents the men who form the Inner Circle, the members of the Noble Inside Guard, are those who belong to the Gridiron Club.

What are the duties of the Washington correspondent? Here is the answer given in the article:

> Frequently, it is true, their journalistic duties are so simple that they could be performed efficiently by a twenty-year-old cub reporter. Quite often there is little to do but collect the "black sheets" or carbon copies of stories that other correspondents have written, change a few ands and buts for purpose of disguise, and put new "by-lines" over them. Any school-boy reasonably skilled at snitching information from a seat-mate's examination paper would be ashamed to take pay for work like this. But the Washington correspondent has other duties, too, and some of them are far more complex. At times, indeed, his job takes on the serious complications that used to attend the functioning of a high-powered wine salesman. He has Cabinet officers to call upon, and Senators and Congressmen to take lunch with, and occasionally there is a President with whom it is his great good fortune to exchange smart cracks.

After chatting pleasantly about the emblem of the Gridiron Club and the "grandiose and romantic" legend of that organization, Mr. Tompkins finally reaches the two banquets that are held each year—banquets where reporters are never present. He then takes up the exception—"the only time any speaker actually said anything worth printing." Before doing so, however, he makes this comment:

> No President but one ever said anything in a Gridiron speech that he couldn't have said in an address of welcome in the East Room to the members of a Boys' Corn Club from Iowa. No foreign Ambassador ever has told a Gridiron Club in semi-annual convention assembled anything he wouldn't have told his butler. No Senator ever has said anything at these dinners that he couldn't have said to—but as to the Senators, one exception must be noted, and this involves also the one President who ever let himself go at a Gridiron dinner.

That exception was, of course, the tilt between President Roosevelt and Senator Joseph B. Foraker over the Brownsville affair of 1906. Foraker had stood by the dismissed negro soldiers (the whole story is told by J. Fred Essary in his book, "Covering Washington," which was reviewed in detail in "Our Own World of Letters"). The scrap between Roosevelt and Foraker was so exciting that the correspondents present threw the ancient principle, "Reporters are never present," into the ashcan and sent their newspapers a full account. Since then, according to Mr. Tompkins, there has never been anything at a Gridiron dinner that would be worth a stick of type in a small rural weekly.

The rest of the article is devoted to the ordinary banquets of the club, and the character of the audience present. The postscript slips into the broiling utensil the reports of the reception to Lindbergh by the National Press Club. This welcome to Lindbergh, like the banquet of the Gridiron Club, is done to a brown.

THOSE who edit and make rural weeklies ought to find much that is worthwhile in "Technical Writing of Farm and Home" (Journalism Publishing Company, Ames, Iowa) by the trio of authors—F. W. Beckman, Harry R. O'Brien, and Blair Converse.

Mr. Beckman is managing editor of The Farmer's Wife and was at one time managing editor of the Des Moines Register-Leader. Mr. O'Brien, who at one time was on the staff of the Country Gentleman, is now in charge of instruction in Agricultural Journalism at Ohio State University. Mr. Converse, at one time night telegraph editor of the Milwaukee Journal, is now head of the Technical Journalism Department of Iowa State College.

The book is divided into two parts. One takes up the news of agriculture and the home and the other discusses the preparation of feature articles in the same field. In Part II, however, there is a chapter which deals with publicity and publicity relationships and another which takes up the ethical and legal aspects of technical writing.

The appendix, technically called Part III, is a collection of illustrative stories. These stories have been remarkably well chosen and are more useful to students and writers because of the comments made by the authors after each story.

To make the volume more useful as a text book in institutions offering technical instruction in agricultural journalism numerous assignments are listed at the conclusion of the various chapters. Messrs. Beckman, O'Brien, and Converse have covered their own assignment with credit to themselves.

TO promote the efficient administration of justice The Journal of the American Judicature Society is published bi-monthly under the auspices of the Law Department of the University of Michigan and the School of Law of Northwestern University. One of the leading articles in the current issue, "Justice Endangered by Sensational Press," puts the blame squarely up to the judges for the excesses of indecency in certain cases. The article also takes American newspapers to task for not reporting court decisions more accurately, even where there has been no attempt to be sensational.

ARE college courses in journalism worthwhile? James L. Ford, who used to review books for the New York Herald, seems to answer this question in the negative in the article which he prints in Scribner's Magazine for September.

Such courses are not worthwhile because the American press, as it exists today, is not worthwhile, according to Mr. Ford. Those who complete their courses and obtain jobs on daily newspapers will spend much of their time with the ear to the telephone receiver listening to press agents. The newspaper owner's most valuable asset is his space, but this is cheerfully given away to any press agent who can worm his way into the editorial rooms and take it—at least that is what Mr. Ford says in his article which is more of an indictment of American journalism than it is of technical instruction.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD when he was retained by Horace Greeley to defend a libel suit brought against the latter by the distinguished novelist, James Fenimore Cooper, prepared an excellent memorandum on the subject of libel. It will be found in Vol. I of "Reports of Cases Argued and Determined in the Supreme Court and in the Court For The Correction of Errors of the State of New York" by Hiram Denio. In the law office this volume is known as "Denio's Reports, No. I." The case of James Fenimore Cooper vs. Greeley & McElrath of the New York Tribune begins on page 347.

CHARLES BAKER, editor-in-chief of The Newspaper World of London, is still in the harness though now 76 years old. One of the features which he compiles for The Newspaper World is "Novelists on Newspaper Men."

In this series Mr. Baker prints comments about the press and those who make it as they may be found in English fiction. Novels from which extracts have been taken include "The Way of the World" by David Christie Murray; "Pendennis" by William Makepeace Thackeray; "A Hind Let Loose" by C. E. Montague; "Mightier than the Sword" by Alphonse Courlander; "The Street of Adventure" by Philip Gibbs; "When a Man's Single" by Sir James Barrie; "The Light That Failed" by Rudyard Kipling; and "The Man Who Dreamed Right" by W. Holt White.

Merchandising Furniture in Illinois---

Furniture manufacturers will find Illinois a highly responsive market. In the first place, Illinois is a state of home owners whose people take great pride in the beauty and comfort of their homes. Some of the most beautiful residential districts in the world are found in the large cities of Illinois.

It is a comparatively easy proposition to merchandise furniture in this state, for the wholesale and retail outlets are so numerous that every furniture manufacturer can find real dealer and jobber co-operation. If he sells to the jobber only, there are over 153 jobbers who will be interested in featuring his line. If he sells direct to the dealer, there are nearly 3,000 furniture stores thruout the state dealing exclusively in furniture.

With the aid of the newspapers listed below not only can you reach the furniture buyer of Illinois, but you can get the full co-operation of both jobber and dealer. If you want specific facts on the furniture trade in Illinois, write to these papers.

BRITISH NEWS MEN WANT 5½-DAY WEEK

Also Ask for Three Weeks' Vacation Yearly—Make Demand For Fewer Juniors on Provincial Newspapers

(Special to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

LONDON.—In conference with the British Newspaper Society recently the National Union of Journalists put forward claims for a regular five-and-a-half day week for provincial journalists, and also urged that the number of junior reporters in such offices should be reduced to the proportion of one to six on daily papers and one to four seniors on weeklies. It was argued by the National Union that the present proportion of junior journalists to senior men in country offices was uneconomically high, and led to subsequent unemployment of the ill-trained juniors. As to the proposed regular 5½ day week it was stated that out of 195 country papers only 73 had this established permanently, and of these 33 were weeklies. A three weeks' holiday for newspapermen had been put forward by the National Union some time ago, and out of 195 papers only 36 (26 dailies) gave three weeks' holiday. An alternative suggestion was the usual fortnight's holiday with a break for a short holiday in the winter, and very few papers had adopted this.

The representatives of the National Union of Journalists pointed out that their members were determined on these points, and the Newspaper Society was asked for an early decision on the questions raised. The Newspaper Society has since circularized its members to find out the position of affairs in the various offices as regards hours and holidays.

COVERS TWO GAMES AT ONCE

Reuters Man Reports Polo and Tennis Together—Keeps Ponies Off Courts

"You can't do two things at once" is the old adage that is often disproved in the hustle of the twentieth century.

On Saturday, Sept. 10, the first of the international polo matches at Meadowbrook and the final day of the Davis Cut at Philadelphia fell the same afternoon at almost the same hour. Reuters News Agency had planned to cable several thousand words covering each event to foreign newspapers, eagerly awaiting the outcomes.

Western Union connections linking up to the Trans-Atlantic cable had been made both at Philadelphia and at the Westbury field, and an operator and an editor were prepared for each assignment.

But the best laid plans miscarry and the day before, the tennis editor came down with flu. And his substitute was away on vacation. A quick decision was made, the wires at Meadowbrook and Philadelphia were cancelled and substituted by similar connections to Reuters New York office in Madison Avenue, and the polo editor perforce assuming for the day also the mantle of tennis, sat facing two typewriters with an operator on either hand, and basing his story on Associated Press copy, simultaneously wrote the running description of the polo and the tennis matches.

Being a careful fellow by nature he succeeded in keeping the horses off the tennis court and racquets off the polo field, nor did he confuse sets with chukkers. The plan worked well, both operators were kept busy all afternoon, the two stories flowed evenly into London.

ADD AIR RECORDS

Former Aviation Editor, Now Press Agent, Takes Hurried Course in Flying

If Charles E. Planck, former aviation editor of the Detroit Free Press, believes in doing a thing, he believes in doing it thoroughly. Last week he resigned his job at Detroit to become the publicity director of Lunken Airport for the Embry-Biddle Company which operates a passenger and express air line from Louisville to Cleveland with headquarters at Cincinnati.

Mr. Planck had been with the Marines air section during the war but had never gotten any farther than the ground school. Shortly after taking his new job he decided to learn to fly in order to be able to write about the art more intelligently. He began his lessons last Wednesday. On Sunday he decided to try a parachute jump so as to accumulate a little more local color for his stories. And jump he did from an altitude of a little more than 1,000 feet. This week he has started his flying in earnest and expects to solo in about two weeks.

CONSOLIDATION

The merging of newspaper interests is a subject that has received special study and investigation by this firm for nearly 17 years. It is a big subject and requires considerable technical knowledge, both as to valuation and operating methods. When properly organized, the results are never disappointing.

We have been factors in many important consolidations, sales and appraisals.

A BRIGHT colored punched card with the heading "Here's One On Me" is delivered in a number of papers to non-subscribers on the routes of a West Texas newspaper. The card gives a brief message from the carrier and asks that if the person would like to receive the paper that the card be hung on the door knob of his home. The message, in a dignified manner, tells a bit about the paper and that the carrier will deliver it promptly and efficiently.—Robert W. Jacobs, San Angelo, Texas.

"Fun For Fall and Winter Evenings" could be the heading over a page or spread devoted to ads of concerns selling games, radio, phonographs, home movie apparatus, etc.—Frank H. Williams.

The St. Petersburg (Fla.) Times runs during the winter season, a daily page "Today in St. Petersburg" in which are listed briefly, leading activities of the day—meetings scheduled and pleasure trips. With this centered in a 5 by 16 space, the rest of the page is devoted to small advertisers who ordinarily do not go in for newspaper alvertising.—T. S., Fort Myers, Fla.

Advertising linked up with a "Crime Prevention Week" held recently in Portsmouth, Va., netted the Star of that city six extra pages. City officials and civic bodies were first induced to commend the campaign. Then a series of illustrations depicting the beginnings of crime and its inevitable end were run in the center of a page of advertisements. Each page was headed "You Can't Win With Crime." A contest was run in connection with the campaign in which cash and merchandise prizes were offered for the best slogans stating in ten words or less why "you can't win with crime."—W. B. Darden.

"Where To Go Tonight" streamers a double truck of advertisements (extra rate) of night clubs, theaters, restaurants and other places catering to the night crowds. The spread has pulled in some advertising that could not be touched heretofore.—B. A. T.

A Boston auto supply house buys small space on page one of the Boston newspapers to offer a prize to anybody who discovers an error in its large advertisement inside of the same issue.—James M. Mosely, Boston.

The Portland (Me.) Press Herald built a page of radio advertising about the coming Dempsey-Tunney fight. Attractive lay-out announcing the bout to come made the page good copy for readers. Try a similar tie-up with big broadcasting events.—Richwager.

How many active manufacturing concerns are there in your city which employ less than 20 men? This may seem like a foolish question but as a matter of fact, this type of concern really is ideal for a city as it operates generally the year around and pays the best wages. A survey of your own city and the products made by these concerns may surprise not only your readers but yourself as well—and furnish a tip to the ad department too.—B. A. T.

GOLF AD MEN ELECT

Following their final tournament of the season at Montauk Downs Golf Club, Sept. 17-18, the Metropolitan Advertising Golf Association, elected L. D. Fernald, assistant general manager of the Condé Nast Publications, president for 1927-28. Laurence A. Weaver, eastern manager of Good Housekeeping, was chosen vice-president, Stuart Peabody, advertising manager of the Bordon Company, secretary, and Joseph N. McDonald, advertising manager of the American Brass Company, treasurer.

BECOMES SEMI-WEEKLY

The Oceanside (Cal.) Blade, published by W. S. Spencer, has changed from a weekly publication to a semi-weekly paper.

WRITES LIFE OF TWEED

Denis T. Lynch of N. Y. Herald Tribune Pictures Famous "Boss"

Denis Tilden Lynch, member of the staff of the New York Herald Tribune, and president of the Newspaper Club of New York, is the author of a new book, "Boss Tweed, The Story of a Grim Generation," to be published by Boni and Liveright, Sept. 24.

Mr. Lynch has been actively engaged in newspaper work since 1902. For 16 years of that time he has been with the New York Herald Tribune and the old Tribune, covering politics chiefly, and the legislature at Albany for ten years.

Throughout his service in Albany Mr. Lynch was a member and officer of the Albany Legislative Correspondents' Association, and for two years was Chairman of the Board of Directors of that organization.

He was elected president of the Newspaper Club at the last election on May 1.

HUNCHES

One Dollar will be paid for each idea published. Send clipping for payment.

THREE and four-line fillers concerning local events are considerably more interesting than those supplied by syndicates. A reporter who is not busy and some statistics from the city hall or county building will furnish a galley of these handy slugs in half an hour.—W. W. D.

Under the caption, "Where You Can Go By Trolley," the Boston Herald from time to time prints maps together with news article suggesting outing trips for those who either do not own or do not care to use an automobile because of heavy traffic. An advertising hook-up could be used effectively.—Yandell C. Cline.

Will the various chain store organizations eventually drive the independent managements out of business? Get comments from chain store managers, other store operators, as well as those in other lines of business.—Paul M. Wildrick.

One New England newspaper is now enlivening its motor page with a series of articles on "Who's Who in Motordom," being snapshots of men who make the community the motor center of the county. These articles are short, readable, and illustrated by photos.—D. P.

A regular feature "Bought New Cars," is proving popular with the Ellenville (N. Y.) Press. Local purchasers are listed and classified by makes of cars. The information is obtained from local dealers.—H. L. Rennick.

A regular feature on the front page of the Atlanta Journal appears under a standing head, done single-column width in cartoon form, bearing the caption "This Evening." Under it may be found a list of outstanding events scheduled in the city for the evening of the day of issue. Each event is given a paragraph, set boldface, stating the nature of the event, the time, and the place. Banquets, meetings, lectures, concerts, and other events are listed. The feature requires but a few inches of space.—W. B., Atlanta.

Football is here again. Early local history of the game has remained buried in most sections while it lies easily accessible. Dig into the musty annuals of colleges and schools of the locality and you will get the story of the first gridiron heroes, the chronicle of heated inter-school rivalries. Then there are the photographs and the names of players who may now be well-known members of the community, with a few good memoirs.—R. F.H., St. Paul.
